Multi-Million Dollar Changes Slated For Pay Raise Bill

Congressional hearings on the President's $518,000,000 military pay bill, which may get under way within two weeks, will be marked by early proposals for major changes in the legislation.

It can be expected that the Kilday Armed Services Subcommittee in the House will amend the bill to provide benefits for more than 200,000 retired persons who are excluded from the Administration measure.

Secretary of Defense Neil H. McElroy had proposed to the Budget Bureau that a 6 per cent cost-of-living adjustment be provided for retired military personnel, at a cost of $41,000,000, but he was turned down.

There is little doubt, of course, that Pentagon officials quickly will endorse forthcoming proposals on Capitol Hill to restore retired benefits to the legislation.

It is much less certain, however, that Defense Department leaders will endorse all of the other changes that are being talked about at the Capitol.

These include suggestions for continuation of the present longevity system, elimination of the suggested proficiency pay plan in favor of variable reenlistment allowances, and modification of the active duty supplemental pay for officers.

Some Members of Congress reportedly are wary of eliminating the traditional longevity system, notwithstanding the Cordiner Committee's position that this handicaps motivation for higher responsibilities, and results in thousands of "inversion" cases where military personnel of lower rank receive more pay than those of higher rank and higher responsibilities.

Seen as a possible compromise on this matter is a revision of the legislation to provide more pay steps within a grade.

This would give an added measure of recognition to longevity, but would also

RIF Policies Hurt Cordiner Plan Proposal; Congressmen Criticize Reserve Release

Top Pentagon leaders inadvertently have knocked some of the props out from under the Cordiner military pay plan.

This development resulted when Department of Defense witnesses were called before the Brooks House Armed Services Subcommittee to explain current RIF programs under which thousands of Reserve officers have been involuntarily separated from active duty.

Both the Air Force and Navy admitted that hundreds of the RIF'd officers have been pilots. The Navy said also that it has released some in other "critical" categories.

Chairman Overton Brooks (D-La.) told THE JOURNAL the testimony threatens enactment of the Cordiner pay bill. He said he favors the Cordiner recommendations, but "I can see where they (the Navy and Air Force witnesses) are building up arguments which could be used against the bill when it comes up for consideration."

One of the basic tenets of the Cordiner plan is that revised military pay scales are needed to enable the Armed Forces to retain their highly skilled personnel.

Members of the Subcommittee were almost unanimous in express concern that the pay plan would be difficult to defend in the face of the RIF action.

Assistant Secretary of the Air Force David S. Smith testified the Air Force selected 1185 pilots to go out under the RIF program. Vadm. James L. Holloway, jr., Chief of Naval Personnel, said the Navy RIF'd 112 Naval Aviators, including six captains, 92 commanders and 14 lieutenant commanders.

Chairman Brooks declared that if the abilities of the RIF'd pilots had been in question they should have been dropped through regular selection procedures rather than under the reduction-in-force program.

Two of the Pentagon witnesses, Assistant Secretary Smith and Assistant Secretary of Defense William H. Francis, jr., cited different reasons for the reduction-in-force decision. Secretary Francis said the RIF action came as the result of new weapons development which has reduced the overall manpower needs of

Perjury-Insubordination Peril

General Nathan F. Twining has declared "it is a hell of a note" the problem that confronts military witnesses on Capitol Hill who are questioned about the adequacy of a budget approved by the President. His comments are of vital interest to everyone in uniform. PAGE 2

Army Promotes Hundreds; Selects 1,375

The Army this week released the names of hundreds of officers promoted to higher temporary ranks, and made available the names of 1,375 captains selected for temporary major—including 112 "outstanding" choices from below the basic zone. PAGE 4

Lawyers Shun Career In Armed Forces; Inexperience Hurts Military Justice

INABILITY to attract and retain career military lawyers—a recent poll showed that only 1 out of 521 obligated-tour officers intended to stay in the Service—is forcing widespread use of inexperienced judge advocates.

At one end of the officer scale, hundreds of junior lawyers are quitting the Services after obligated tours. At the other, scores of experienced JAG's are retiring after 20 years service.

The Armed Forces find it necessary to place "inexperienced people in jobs which conceivably could cost the taxpayer sums up to a million dollars if a mistake is made."

This "desperate picture," being faced by all three Services, was drawn by Capt. W. C. Hamilton, Assistant Executive in the Office of the Air Force Judge Advocate General, Maj. Gen. Reginald C. Harmon.

He made his observation to THE JOURNAL during a joint interview with Capt. Robert A. Fitch, Assistant Navy Judge Advocate for Personnel, Reserve and Management.

Statistics compiled by the Service JAG offices indicate that unless remedial legislation is enacted to provide realistic pay-scales and improved promotion opportunities, the situation will go from bad to very bad.

Even with swift action on the proposed legislation introduced at the last session of Congress by Senator Strom Thurmond (D-S.C.), "it is too late to rectify the situation to maintain stabilization," Captain Hamilton said. Senator Thurmond's Bill is still in committee.

A parallel proposal was submitted to the House at the current session by Rep. Emanuel Celler (D-N.Y.).

The Thurmond-Celler Bills would place lawyers on par with doctors, dentists and veterinarians by authorizing payment of an additional $100 a month to officers with less than two years of active service; $150 for service over two years; $200 for more than six years; and, $250 for 10 or more years.

In addition, the proposals permit lawyers to be advanced to temporary two-track rank at any time after the first anniversary date they are admitted to practice before a Federal Court or the highest court of a State.

Lawyers' base pay would be adjusted

Gen. Twining Tells Problem Of "Perjury Or Insubordination"; JCS Chairman Gives Senators His Reorganization Views

A "go slow" approach to the problem of reorganizing the top Defense structure was advocated 14 January by General Nathan F. Twining, USAF,

General Twining

Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff. He testified before the Senate Preparedness Subcommittee investigating the U. S. missile and satellite programs.

General Twining declared that it is a "hell of a note" for military officers to be asked whether the President's final decision on budget matters is "adequate." This, he said, puts them in the position of either perjuring themselves or "approaching insubordination."

Here are the pertinent sections of the JCS Chairman's comments as concerns Defense Department structure, Service roles and missions and the testimony of military witnesses on Capitol Hill.

Soviets Not Ahead "Today"

Gen. Twining, I, among many others in the Military Establishment, have been (deleted) concerned over public attitudes and misunderstandings which have developed in the past few months. Specifically, recent demonstrations of Soviet technological achievement have been interpreted by some segments of the public as evidence that the Soviets are now—today—ahead of us in military strength in being.

This is a most dangerous misapprehension, I can state with the fullest confidence that it is not true. In order that the confidence of the Free World may remain adequate to the cold war tasks which lie ahead, it is important that we realize, at home and abroad, that we are not—today—in my judgment in a position of inferior strength, vis-a-vis the Soviet Union.

The important thing to keep clearly in focus is that we should be careful, when comparing our capability with that of the Soviets, to distinguish between the present and the future. Our military forces are strong enough now to win if war is thrust upon us—and we can take care of the future if we will put our energies to the task.

Take Reorganization "Pretty Slow"

Gen. Twining, In regard to any reorganization of our present defense setup, we have all heard all kinds and ways of doing it, and there are good and bad things in all of them, and I think my own recommendation on the general subject would be to take the thing pretty slow and look at it very carefully and study it thoroughly before we change horses in this very hectic period.

With regard to the two hat business, I realize it does put a load on a chief, a terrific load. I was very fortunate when I was Chief of the Air Force to have General White with me, and I had complete confidence in him and turned over a great deal of the Air Force work to him and I had no concern whatsoever, so I probably did more than the other Chiefs in that regard. I delegated more.

I do feel strongly though that in the planning part of the Defense operation, if you do not have an active officer up there who knows what his Service can do, its capabilities, weaknesses, strengths of his own service, he is not going to make much of a contribution to the overall defense planning, and I think as a corporate body you must have those people up there.

Now we should do all we can to relieve them of responsibility.

Vote Not Necessary

Senator Saltonstall, In their operations?

Gen. Twining, Yes.

Sen. Saltonstall, Now what about the Chairman having a vote?

Gen. Twining, Well, the vote—they do not vote as you know. You just do not vote. When the original bill was discussed, the question of the vote came up. There is no vote.

Now the Chairman, by statute, has no vote, but the others never vote either, so the vote is not necessary, Senator Saltonstall.

Sen. Saltonstall, The vote is not necessary?

Gen. Twining, No.

Sen. Saltonstall, You believe that where there is a division, that the matter should go up to the Secretary of Defense?

Gen. Twining, Yes, oh, yes, The Secretary of Defense makes all decisions. The Chiefs make no decisions.

Sen. Saltonstall, Is it your practice to be the advisor, the military advisor to the Secretary of Defense and the President?

Gen. Twining, Yes, it is.

Senator Saltonstall, As Chairman?

Gen. Twining, Yes.

Sen. Saltonstall, And you believe that it is your function to advise them from a military point of view?

Gen. Twining, Yes.

Sen. Saltonstall, And as such then you believe that the present organization, with the three men wearing the two hats, you as Chairman wearing one hat is a functional organization that is satisfactory and can operate our military planning, our military strategy satisfactorily and quickly?

Gen. Twining, Senator Saltonstall, I would like to leave it more general than that. I think that the President himself in his address the other day made some comments on this subject and I do not want to say now to this committee that I am committing myself to any line of endeavor as far as the Chiefs are concerned.

I think that I have got to keep an open mind about this and study all these proposals, and then make the recommendations so it comes through one director.

Sen. Saltonstall, Do you believe that the Secretary of Defense should have his own planning organization as opposed to the planning organizations now that are in the Army, Navy and Air Force?

Gen. Twining, I think he should have just one planning organization, get advice from just one group of military people.

Sen. Saltonstall, And that military group of people are the Joint Chiefs of Staff?

Gen. Twining, Yes.

Sen. Saltonstall, And where they disagree on the planning, then the Secretary of Defense has got to weigh both sides and make his decision?

Gen. Twining, That is right.

Roles and Missions Comments

Sen. Saltonstall, Now the missions that were set out by statute in 1947—I make this as an observation—have in my opinion become obsolete.

Do you agree with that?

Gen. Twining, I think that the same thing applies there.

The roles and missions are set up for two reasons:

No. 1, is that we want to make sure that all types of operations that we would be called on to do in time of war are covered in that some service has the responsibility to make sure none were left open.

And the second reason for roles and missions is to pin down some of these assignments so that all the Services won't be doing the same thing.

You just can't have that duplication and extra expense. The Services have got to be given their mission and they are supposed to stay on that mission, and another Service is not supposed to move over and take over that mission unilaterally because that is duplication and is very expensive, and that is the second reason the roles and missions are not meant to be static, (frozen) hard directives to a service. They have got to have some give and take in it. There has got to be some of that.

Sen. Saltonstall, There has been a great deal of argument or questioning on the chain of command, and the operation of the Department of Defense, particularly with the Secretary of Defense. The present statutes do not give the Secretary of Defense control over the three agencies, Army, Navy and Air Force.

It does give him direction, but not control. If we are going to have a more unified command that will make a quicker decision, should you not add a greater opportunity for control by the Secretary of Defense over the three agencies?

Gen. Twining, I think, Senator Saltonstall, that that is another thing that should be looked at very carefully and studied before I would like to comment on it, commit myself.

Chairman Says "Go Slow"

Sen. Saltonstall, In other words, you believe that we have got to go slow in making any changes along those lines?

Gen. Twining, I think along any lines in this organization.

Sen. Saltonstall, Now what do you understand is the chain of command now from the President down?

Gen. Twining, The President to the Secretary of Defense.

Sen. Saltonstall, All right, go ahead from there.

Gen. Twining, It goes to the Service Secretaries and from the Secretary of Defense to the unified commander.

Sen. Saltonstall, Do you believe that the Joint Chiefs of Staff have a responsibility directly to the President, bypassing if they need to do so the Secretary of Defense, or do you believe that under the present law the Chiefs of Staff have to go through the Secretary of Defense?

Gen. Twining, I think that the Chief of Staff should go to the President any time he wants to, but I think he should go through the Secretary of Defense and tell the Secretary of Defense why he is going to see the President.

I think that is the way it should be done. I am sure the Secretary of Defense would never stop him from going.

Under questioning by Senator Case (R-N.J.), General Twining agreed that it "would be a good idea" to put the power to realign Service roles and missions in the Defense Department. Senator Case noted this would allow more flexibility.

Military Dilemma

Gen. Twining, The cycle of this, the Services come up with the forces they want, and they recommend to the Secretary of Defense, and it goes on through the cycle, the Bureau of the Budget and finally the White House, and a certain figure comes out, and the Services do not get what they ask for.

I do not know what we are going to do about it. It is the system of our government. You can say it is inadequate, and turn your suit in. We do not play that way. If you say it is adequate, then you do not feel good about that.

I think these committees are a little rough on these witnesses up here. I think you ought to reconsider what to do. These people are honest, sincere, and they do the best they can. And they feel that Service should have such-and-such an amount of money and such-and-such forces, and they put it through the routine system of our government handling. And then you call them back after the Chief of State has decided what the budget is, and you call them in here and ask them, "Is this adequate?"

Well, you know the rules just as well as I do. I think it ought to be—it is a hell of a note. Some of these boys are taking a pretty good beating, the Schrievs and the Gavins and the rest of them. I am a little heavy on this one.

...I think the committee should and must interrogate these witnesses from stem to stern and get all of the evidence and information they can, and the Services come through here and I think they give it all to the committee. They give everything.

Then after it is all over, the cycle has been gone through. If you call them back, that is fine, too. Ask them again, "What they put in for, what do you think the Service ought to have?" They will tell you that again.

But then to take the President's final decision and turn it back on them and say, "Is this adequate?" I think that ought to be reconsidered, because it puts the military man in a pretty tough seat, because he can say—if he says it is inadequate, he just, I think, is approaching insubordination; and if he says it is adequate, he has more or less perjured himself.

Sen. Symington, But we are discussing principle here. The principle is that you are telling us this afternoon, if somebody strikes the rock, Moses, or the President, then when that rock is struck, that is it; and thereafter you cannot come up here and give us the benefit of your wisdom which the American taxpayer has paid for. I cannot see your position.

NEXT WEEK—

Budget Bureau Action—

The Budget Bureau will open its doors next week to THE JOURNAL for a report of what happens to Pentagon money requests. Defense Department planning is handled differently from that of other agencies, Bureau officials say. Next week's JOURNAL will tell why and how.

Fighting Fuel—

Armed Forces streamlining and new strategic planning concepts will vitally affect petroleum planning for all the Services. Next week THE JOURNAL will carry a report on how the Military Petroleum Supply Agency, headed by RADM. O. P. Lattu, USN, operates to ease services' fuel problems. The report will look into future plans for this unique single-manager operation.

DoD Okays Rent Cut Retroactivity

Rent cuts for military families living in substandard quarters will be made retroactive to 1 January.

This is the latest word on the long-delayed program which was approved by the Congress and the President last August.

More than 36,000 families will be affected. The total amount they will save under the rent reduction plan is about $15 million.

Top legal men at the Pentagon say that if the President signs an executive order putting the rent cuts into effect this month, as he is expected to do, the cuts can be made retroactive to the first of the year.

Implementing instructions which are being prepared for the field will tell the Services that they have until 1 May to decide which of their quarters are substandard.

As each set of quarters is declared substandard, occupants will be notified of the fact and assigned new rents. Regardless of when the reduction comes, it will date back to 1 January.

Thus, families whose quarters are not declared substandard until the end of April will receive the difference between their old and new rents for a period of four months.

As THE JOURNAL went to press, the Defense Department's substandard quarters directive was still at the Bureau of the Budget where an Executive Order is being prepared for the President's signature. When the order is signed, the Department is expected to move quickly in sending its instructions to the field.

The final action, when it comes, will climax almost five months' delay during which time military families living in shoddy accommodations have continued to pay higher rents than were proposed by the Congress last August.

Adm. Riley To CINCPAC

The Navy has issued orders assigning Vice Adm. Herbert D. Riley from command of Carrier Division One to be Chief of Staff and Aide to the Commander in Chief Pacific Adm. Felix B. Stump.

Also announced is the shift of RADM. Ralph S. Clarke from Chief of Naval Advanced Training at NAS Corpus Christi, Tex., to command of Carrier Division Five.

The Navy has named Capt. Joseph Clifton to the Corpus Christi billet. He has been selected for Rear Admiral rank.

M/G William Nutter Heads Philippine MAA

Maj. Gen. William H. Nutter, Deputy Commanding General, Fifth US Army, Chicago, Ill., has been named Chief of the Joint US Military Assistance Advisory Group in the Philippines.

He succeeds Maj. Gen. Joseph L. Harper, Jr., who has been named to a new Post.

JAG Pay Need Termed "Crucial"

The need for incentive pay for military lawyers is "crucial," according to Senator Strom Thurmond (D-S. C.) who introduced the Bill to provide for increased pay and accelerated promotion of JAG officers.

The Senator's Bill, S. 1165, introduced at the last session of Congress, would give the lawyer-officer who obtained his legal education prior to military service a three year service credit for pay and promotion purposes and also permit faster promotion from lieutenant to captain in the Army and Air Force and to lieutenant in the Navy after the first anniversary of the officer's admission to practice.

The Senator noted that 41 per cent of Army lawyers in JAG are serving in the rank of lieutenant.

"The overwhelming majority of these officers," Senator Thurmond said, "are recent law school graduates and are serving their required tours of active duty in the Reserve in lieu of serving in enlisted status under Selective Service law requirements. Almost all of these officers leave the Service upon completion of the minimum required tour, preferring to return to civilian life where they hope to realize a substantially better return on their investment in an average of seven years of advanced education. The resulting deficiency in experienced personnel in the legal field of the Armed Service is accentuated by the promotion and retirement of the more experienced officers."

The Senator said that "only by an effectively designed program to retain experienced legal officers can prompt trial for accused military personnel be accomplished, top legal services to our men in the Armed Forces and their commanders be provided, and capable handling of our multi-million dollar contracts for Service procurement be insured."

SERVICES OPPOSED

The Defense Department still is "staffing" a bill which it received almost a year ago from the Senate Armed Services Committee for comment.

The legislation, introduced by Senator Strom Thurmond (D-S. C.) in February 1957, is designed to increase the pay of military lawyers and, at the same time, improve their promotion opportunities. The bill would also place lawyers on parity with doctors and dentists by allowing them credit for the time they spent in school earning their professional degrees.

The Navy position on the proposal is "opposition on principle." The Navy reportedly feels that it does not want to be in the position of backing incentives for a special group of officers.

The Air Force, too, is opposed to the Bill, feeling that it may prejudice the Cordner Bill. The official Army position is opposition on the grounds that the bill is a "piecemeal approach" to the manpower problem.

The Defense Department has yet to make its position known.

Lawyers Shun Career In Armed Forces

From first page—

to reflect the time they spent in school gaining their professional status.

Results of statistical compilations and surveys revealed to THE JOURNAL show that the number of experienced lawyers in the Armed Services is dropping at an alarming rate.

Captain Fitch states that at the present time, Navy JAG Offices are "handicapped by a 50 per cent inexperience factor." The situation is similar in the Army and the Air Force.

The increasing shortage of experienced lawyers arises from two causes.

First, junior officers serving on three-year obligated tours of duty are being lured away from the Services by higher paying non-military Government positions, better paid jobs with industry, and the prospects of bettering their economic situation in private practice.

In the second case, senior officers are cutting short their careers after completing 20 years service in order to seize the opportunity of taking advantage of the civilian lawyer economic climate.

A poll of Army and Air Force career officers, completed on 15 December 1957, shows that more than 80 per cent of the career officers who responded to the query intend to make application for 20-year retirements. Out of 955 officers who replied, 780 stated they will be leaving the Service following completion of the required 20 years. This group of lawyers, the majority of whom are in the ranks of colonel and lieutenant colonel, will be eligible for retirement during the next five years.

In the Navy, of all four-stripe and three-stripe lawyers currently on active duty, 80 to 85 per cent are slated for retirement by 1962.

Reject Service Careers

A poll of obligated-service lawyers (those required to spend three years on active duty) in the Army and Air Force brought forth the startling fact that only one of 521 juniors who answered the questionnaire plans to make the Service a career.

During the past three years, only five three-year obligees in the Navy remained on active duty after completion of their initial tours.

The upshot of this situation is that military legal organizations are caught in a squeeze. They can not offer young lawyers enough money to seek military careers and they can't keep the experienced officers on board because of the stiff competition on the outside.

The virtual 100 per cent turnover of junior officers every three years, coupled with the loss of increasingly larger numbers of seniors, means an ever growing workload for all ranks of lawyers. This is particularly true for the seniors who, because of their experience, are assigned the most difficult cases.

In many cases, this means that as the workload goes up, only cursory attention can be given to cases on which more time should be spent, Captain Fitch said.

This fact, in turn, costs money, he said. If a lawyer makes an error in a military justice case, the cost of retrial is approximately $5,000.

During recent weeks, the Court of Appeals has lambasted the Navy for its handling of cases. The Court said it could not understand how cases are getting by with so many errors.

Errors At Trial Level

If the Navy had a sufficient number of lawyers, Captain Fitch said, this situation would not arise. The errors, he said, result from inexperience at the trial level. Often, JAG officers can not spend as much time on each case as would be advisable because of the press of other cases.

The Assistant Navy JAG expressed concern about this situation, pointing out that proper handling of UCMJ cases is "extremely important because it assures sailors that they will get a square deal and this knowledge is a strong morale factor."

Service lawyers are not limited to handling cases which fall under the province of the UCMJ. In addition, they handle tort claims brought against the Government as a result of accidents involving military vehicles, planes and ships. In many instances, these cases must go before Federal Courts. Military lawyers also handle stevedoring claims and many cases in the area of International law which involve litigation at locations in which the United States maintains overseas bases.

At the same time, Service lawyers are responsible for advising active duty officers and men of their legal rights.

Here are a few samples of the works performed by military lawyers with a limited force of officers.

In 1956, JAG officers conducted 184,348 UCMJ trials and participated in 4,437 trials in foreign courts. During that year, Air Force lawyers handled $8 billion worth of Government contracts. And, in Fiscal Year 1957, AF JAG's handled 11,000 patent cases having a total value of approximately $3 billion.

Navy lawyers, during the same period, dealt with tort and admiralty cases involving several hundreds of millions of dollars worth of claims against the Government.

Service legal manpower officials estimate that they need a combined strength of at least 2,700 Regular career officers on board each year through 1962 in order to perform their functions effectively.

Experience Level Falls

In 1957 there were only 1,168 careerists on board. The picture will brighten a little in 1958 when augmentations of Reservists will increase the Regular strength to 1,430. In the succeeding years, however, the situation again becomes cloudy as experienced officers complete their 20 year careers. By 1962, the force of career officers will drop to a low of 1,062, considerably less than one-half the number the Services feel is a minimum manpower requirement.

As the experience level dwindles, the Services will be forced to place more and more juniors (two-track officers) in billets which require the experience of majors (lieutenant commanders) and lieutenant colonels (commanders).

The last official count of active duty officers, completed on 30 Nov. 1957, amounted to a total of 2,689.

Here's a breakdown:

	Army	Air Force	Navy
Col.-Capt.	129	60	63
Lt. Col.-Cdr.	158	137	168
Maj.-LCdr.	134	216	57
Capt.-Lt.	193	281	55
Lt.-Lt. (Jg) & Ens.	448	501	70
TOTAL	1,060	1,196	433

Captain Fitch said that current studies by the Navy JAG Office, headed by RAdm. Chester C. Ward, show that it needs at least 575 officers to do the job the Navy needs to have done. The authorized strength of the Navy JAG will be 444 lawyers at the end of the year. Since the number of lawyers in the Navy is based on a percentage related to the number of Line officers, Captain Fitch said, the JAG Office can not shoot for the numbers it deems essential. Even if the Navy administratively raised the quota, JAG would not be able to meet its goal under present conditions, he said.

Based on the low authorized strength, Captain Fitch said, the Navy JAG Office will find itself short about 25 officers by 30 June.

Although the Navy maintains approximately 2,000 activities, lawyers are assigned to only 169 of the largest installations. Since a number of lawyers are in the pipeline, the Navy JAG Office is forced to spread about 400 officers among the 169 major activities. This amounts to 1.9 lawyers for each of the Navy's chief bases and fields.

Gen. Twining Tells Problem Of "Perjury Or Insubordination"; JCS Chairman Gives Senators His Reorganization Views

A "go slow" approach to the problem of reorganizing the top Defense structure was advocated 14 January by General Nathan F. Twining, USAF,

General Twining

Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff. He testified before the Senate Preparedness Subcommittee investigating the U. S. missile and satellite programs.

General Twining declared that it is a "hell of a note" for military officers to be asked whether the President's final decision on budget matters is "adequate." This, he said, puts them in the position of either perjuring themselves or "approaching insubordination."

Here are the pertinent sections of the JCS Chairman's comments as concerns Defense Department structure, Service roles and missions and the testimony of military witnesses on Capitol Hill.

Soviets Not Ahead "Today"

Gen. Twining, I, among many others in the Military Establishment, have been (deleted) concerned over public attitudes and misunderstandings which have developed in the past few months. Specifically, recent demonstrations of Soviet technological achievement have been interpreted by some segments of the public as evidence that the Soviets are now—today—ahead of us in military strength in being.

This is a most dangerous misapprehension. I can state with the fullest confidence that it is not true. In order that the confidence of the Free World may remain adequate to the cold war tasks which lie ahead, it is important that we realize, at home and abroad, that we are not—today—in my judgment in a position of inferior strength, vis-a-vis the Soviet Union.

The important thing to keep clearly in focus is that we should be careful, when comparing our capability with that of the Soviets, to distinguish between the present and the future. Our military forces are strong enough now to win if war is thrust upon us—and we can take care of the future if we will put our energies to the task.

Take Reorganization "Pretty Slow"

Gen. Twining. In regard to any reorganization of our present defense setup, we have all heard all kinds and ways of doing it, and there are good and bad things in all of them, and I think my own recommendation on the general subject would be to take the thing pretty slow and look at it very carefully and study it thoroughly before we change horses in this very hectic period.

With regard to the two hat business, I realize it does put a load on a chief, a terrific load. I was very fortunate when I was Chief of the Air Force to have General White with me, and I had complete confidence in him and turned over a great deal of the Air Force work to him and I had no concern whatsoever, so I probably did more than the other Chiefs in that regard. I delegated more.

I do feel strongly though that in the planning part of the Defense operation, if you do not have an active officer up there who knows what his Service can do, its capabilities, weaknesses, strengths of his own service, he is not going to make much of a contribution to the overall defense planning, and I think as a corporate body you must have those people up there.

Now we should do all we can to relieve them of responsibility.

Vote Not Necessary

Senator Saltonstall. In their operations?

Gen. Twining. Yes.

Sen. Saltonstall. Now what about the Chairman having a vote?

Gen. Twining. Well, the vote—they do not vote as you know. You just do not vote. When the original bill was discussed, the question of the vote came up. There is no vote.

Now the Chairman, by statute, has no vote, but the others never vote either, so the vote is not necessary, Senator Saltonstall.

Sen. Saltonstall. The vote is not necessary?

Gen. Twining. No.

Sen. Saltonstall. You believe that where there is a division, that the matter should go up to the Secretary of Defense?

Gen. Twining. Yes, oh, yes. The Secretary of Defense makes all decisions. The Chiefs make no decisions.

Sen. Saltonstall. Is it your practice to be the advisor, the military advisor to the Secretary of Defense and the President?

Gen. Twining. Yes, it is.

Senator Saltonstall. As Chairman?

Gen. Twining. Yes.

Sen. Saltonstall. And you believe that it is your function to advise them from a military point of view?

Gen. Twining. Yes.

Sen. Saltonstall. And as such then you believe that the present organization, with the three men wearing the two hats, you as Chairman wearing one hat is a functional organization that is satisfactory and can operate our military planning, our military strategy satisfactorily and quickly?

Gen. Twining. Senator Saltonstall, I would like to leave it more general than that. I think that the President himself in his address the other day made some comments on this subject and I do not want to say now to this committee that I am committing myself to any line of endeavor as far as the Chiefs are concerned.

I think that I have got to keep an open mind about this and study all these proposals, and then make the recommendations so it comes through one director.

Sen. Saltonstall. Do you believe that the Secretary of Defense should have his own planning organization as opposed to the planning organizations now that are in the Army, Navy and Air Force?

Gen. Twining. I think he should have just one planning organization, get advice from just one group of military people.

Sen. Saltonstall. And that military group of people are the Joint Chiefs of Staff?

Gen. Twining. Yes.

Sen. Saltonstall. And where they disagree on the planning, then the Secretary of Defense has got to weigh both sides and make his decision?

Gen. Twining. That is right.

Roles and Missions Comments

Sen. Saltonstall. Now the missions that were set out by statute in 1947—I make this as an observation—have in my opinion become obsolete.

Do you agree with that?

Gen. Twining. I think that the same thing applies there.

The roles and missions are set up for two reasons:

No. 1, is that we want to make sure that all types of operations that we would be called on to do in time of war are covered in that some service has the responsibility to make sure none were left open.

And the second reason for roles and missions is to pin down some of these assignments so that all the Services won't be doing the same thing.

You just can't have that duplication and extra expense. The Services have got to be given their mission and they are supposed to stay on that mission, and another Service is not supposed to move over and take over that mission unilaterally because that is duplication and is very expensive, and that is the second reason the roles and missions are not meant to be static, (frozen) hard directives to a service. They have got to have some give and take in it. There has got to be some of that.

Sen. Saltonstall. There has been a great deal of argument or questioning on the chain of command, and the operation of the Department of Defense, particularly with the Secretary of Defense. The present statutes do not give the Secretary of Defense control over the three agencies, Army, Navy and Air Force.

It does give him direction, but not control. If we are going to have a more unified command that will make a quicker decision, should you not add a greater opportunity for control by the Secretary of Defense over the three agencies?

tunity for control by the Secretary of Defense over the three agencies?

Gen. Twining. I think, Senator Saltonstall, that that is another thing that should be looked at very carefully and studied before I would like to comment on it, commit myself.

Chairman Says "Go Slow"

Sen. Saltonstall. In other words, you believe that we have got to go slow in making any changes along those lines?

Gen. Twining. I think along any lines in this organization.

Sen. Saltonstall. Now what do you understand is the chain of command now from the President down?

Gen. Twining. The President to the Secretary of Defense.

Sen. Saltonstall. All right, go ahead from there.

Gen. Twining. It goes to the Service Secretaries and from the Secretary of Defense to the unified commander.

Sen. Saltonstall. Do you believe that the Joint Chiefs of Staff have a responsibility directly to the President, bypassing if they need to do so the Secretary of Defense, or do you believe that under the present law the Chiefs of Staff have to go through the Secretary of Defense?

Gen. Twining. I think that the Chief of Staff should go to the President any time he wants to, but I think he should go through the Secretary of Defense and tell the Secretary of Defense why he is going to see the President.

I think that is the way it should be done. I am sure the Secretary of Defense would never stop him from going.

Under questioning by Senator Case (R-N.J.), General Twining agreed that it "would be a good idea" to put the power to realign Service roles and missions in the Defense Department. Senator Case noted this would allow more flexibility.

Military Dilemma

Gen. Twining. The cycle of this, the Services come up with the forces they want, and they recommend to the Secretary of Defense, and it goes on through the cycle, the Bureau of the Budget and finally the White House, and a certain figure comes out, and the Services do not get what they ask for.

I do not know what we are going to do about it. It is the system of our government. You can say it is inadequate, and turn your suit in. We do not play that way. If you say it is adequate, then you do not feel good about that.

I think these committees are a little rough on these witnesses up here. I think you ought to reconsider what to do. These people are honest, sincere, and they do the best they can. And they feel that Service should have such-and-such an amount of money and such-and-such forces, and they put it through the routine system of our government handling. And then you call them back after the Chief of State has decided what the budget is, and you call them in here and ask them, "Is this adequate?"

Well, you know the rules just as well as I do. I think it ought to be—it is a hell of a note. Some of these boys are taking a pretty good beating, the Schrievs and the Gavins and the rest of them. I am a little heavy on this one.

... I think the committee should and must interrogate these witnesses from stem to stern and get all of the evidence and information they can, and the Services come through here and I think they give it all to the committee. They give everything.

Then after it is all over, the cycle has been gone through. If you call them back, that is fine, too. Ask them again, "What they put in for, what do you think the Service ought to have?" They will tell you that again.

But then to take the President's final decision and turn it back on them and say, "Is this adequate?" I think that ought to be reconsidered, because it puts the military man in a pretty tough seat, because he can say—if he says it is inadequate, he just, I think, is approaching insubordination; and if he says it is adequate, he has more or less perjured himself.

Sen. Symington. But we are discussing principle here. The principle is that you are telling us this afternoon, if somebody strikes the rock, Moses, or the President, then when that rock is struck, that is it; and thereafter you cannot come up here and give us the benefit of your wisdom which the American taxpayer has paid for. I cannot see your position.

NEXT WEEK—

Budget Bureau Action—

The Budget Bureau will open its doors next week to THE JOURNAL for a report of what happens to Pentagon money requests. Defense Department planning is handled differently from that of other agencies, Bureau officials say. Next week's JOURNAL will tell why and how.

Fighting Fuel—

Armed Forces streamlining and new strategic planning concepts will vitally affect petroleum planning for all the Services. Next week THE JOURNAL will carry a report on how the Military Petroleum Supply Agency, headed by RADM. O. P. Lattu, USN, operates to ease services' fuel problems. The report will look into future plans for this unique single-manager operation.

DoD Okays Rent Cuts Retroactivity

Rent cuts for military families living in substandard quarters will be made retroactive to 1 January.

This is the latest word on the long-delayed program which was approved by the Congress and the President last August.

More than 36,000 families will be affected. The total amount they will save under the rent reduction plan is about $15 million.

Top legal men at the Pentagon say that if the President signs an executive order putting the rent cuts into effect this month, as he is expected to do, the cuts can be made retroactive to the first of the year.

Implementing instructions which are being prepared for the field will tell the Services that they have until 1 May to decide which of their quarters are substandard.

As each set of quarters is declared substandard, occupants will be notified of the fact and assigned new rents. Regardless of when the reduction comes, it will date back to 1 January.

Thus, families whose quarters are not declared substandard until the end of April will receive the difference between their old and new rents for a period of four months.

As THE JOURNAL went to press, the Defense Department's substandard quarters directive was still at the Bureau of the Budget where an Executive Order is being prepared for the President's signature. When the order is signed, the Department is expected to move quickly in sending its instructions to the field.

The final action, when it comes, will climax almost five months' delay during which time military families living in shoddy accommodations have continued to pay higher rents than were proposed by the Congress last August.

JAG Pay Need Termed "Crucial"

The need for incentive pay for military lawyers is "crucial," according to Senator Strom Thurmond (D-S. C.) who introduced the Bill to provide for increased pay and accelerated promotion of JAG officers.

The Senator's Bill, S. 1165, introduced at the last session of Congress, would give the lawyer-officer who obtained his legal education prior to military service a three year service credit for pay and promotion purposes and also permit faster promotion from lieutenant to captain in the Army and Air Force and to lieutenant in the Navy after the first anniversary of the officer's admission to practice.

The Senator noted that 41 per cent of Army lawyers in JAG are serving in the rank of lieutenant.

"The overwhelming majority of these officers," Senator Thurmond said, "are recent law school graduates and are serving their required tours of active duty in the Reserve in lieu of serving in enlisted status under Selective Service law requirements. Almost all of these officers leave the Service upon completion of the minimum required tour, preferring to return to civilian life where they hope to realize a substantially better return on their investment in an average of seven years of advanced education. The resulting deficiency in experienced personnel in the legal field of the Armed Service is accentuated by the promotion and retirement of the more experienced officers."

The Senator said that "only by an effectively designed program to retain experienced legal officers can prompt trial for accused military personnel be accomplished, top legal services to our men in the Armed Forces and their commanders be provided, and capable handling of our multi-million dollar contracts for Service procurement be insured."

SERVICES OPPOSED

The Defense Department still is "staffing" a bill which it received almost a year ago from the Senate Armed Services Committee for comment.

The legislation, introduced by Senator Strom Thurmond (D-S. C.) in February 1957, is designed to increase the pay of military lawyers and, at the same time, improve their promotion opportunities. The bill would also place lawyers on parity with doctors and dentists by allowing them credit for the time they spent in school earning their professional degrees.

The Navy position on the proposal is "opposition on principle." The Navy reportedly feels that it does not want to be in the position of backing incentives for a special group of officers.

The Air Force, too, is opposed to the Bill, feeling that it may prejudice the Cordiner Bill. The official Army position is opposition on the grounds that the bill is a "piecemeal approach" to the manpower problem.

The Defense Department has yet to make its position known.

Commands Eng. Center Reg.

Lt. Col. Ray E. Lavan, USA, has assumed command of the U. S. Army Engineer Center Regiment at Ft. Belvoir. Colonel Lavan, former commanding officer of the 3d Battalion, U. S. Army Engineer Center Regiment, succeeds Col. Charles H. Waters, who has been reassigned as commanding officer of the Granite City Engineer Depot.

Colonel Lavan and his wife reside at quarters on the post. They have one son, Ray, Jr., who is a midshipman second class at the U. S. Naval Academy.

Lawyers Shun Career In Armed Forces

From first page—

to reflect the time they spent in school gaining their professional status.

Results of statistical compilations and surveys revealed to THE JOURNAL show that the number of experienced lawyers in the Armed Services is dropping at an alarming rate.

Captain Fitch states that at the present time, Navy JAG Offices are "handicapped by a 50 per cent inexperience factor." The situation is similar in the Army and the Air Force.

The increasing shortage of experienced lawyers arises from two causes.

First, junior officers serving on three-year obligated tours of duty are being lured away from the Services by higher paying non-military Government positions, better paid jobs with industry, and the prospects of bettering their economic situation in private practice.

In the second case, senior officers are cutting short their careers after completing 20 years service in order to seize the opportunity of taking advantage of the civilian lawyer economic climate.

A poll of Army and Air Force career officers, completed on 15 December 1957, shows that more than 80 per cent of the career officers who responded to the query intend to make application for 20-year retirements. Out of 955 officers who replied, 780 stated they will be leaving the Service following completion of the required 20 years. This group of lawyers, the majority of whom are in the ranks of colonel and lieutenant colonel, will be eligible for retirement during the next five years.

In the Navy, of all four-stripe and three-stripe lawyers currently on active duty, 80 to 85 per cent are slated for retirement by 1962.

Reject Service Careers

A poll of obligated-service lawyers (those required to spend three years on active duty) in the Army and Air Force brought forth the startling fact that only one of 521 juniors who answered the questionnaire plans to make the Service a career.

During the past three years, only five three-year obligees in the Navy remained on active duty after completion of their initial tours.

The upshot of this situation is that military legal organizations are caught in a squeeze. They can not offer young lawyers enough money to seek military careers and they can't keep the experienced officers on board because of the stiff competition on the outside.

The virtual 100 per cent turnover of junior officers every three years, coupled with the loss of increasingly larger numbers of seniors, means an ever growing workload for all ranks of lawyers. This is particularly true for the seniors who, because of their experience, are assigned the most difficult cases.

In many cases, this means that as the workload goes up, only cursory attention can be given to cases on which more time should be spent, Captain Fitch said.

This fact, in turn, costs money, he said. If a lawyer makes an error in a military justice case, the cost of retrial is approximately $5,000.

During recent weeks, the Court of Appeals has lambasted the Navy for its handling of cases. The Court said it could not understand how cases are getting by with so many errors.

Errors At Trial Level

If the Navy had a sufficient number of lawyers, Captain Fitch said, this situation would not arise. The errors, he said, result from inexperience at the trial level. Often, JAG officers can not spend as much time on each case as would be advisable because of the press of other cases.

The Assistant Navy JAG expressed concern about this situation, pointing out that proper handling of UCMJ cases is "extremely important because it assures sailors that they will get a square deal and this knowledge is a strong morale factor."

Service lawyers are not limited to handling cases which fall under the province of the UCMJ. In addition, they handle tort claims brought against the Government as a result of accidents involving military vehicles, planes and ships. In many instances, these cases must go before Federal Courts. Military lawyers also handle stevedoring claims and many cases in the area of International law which involve litigation at locations in which the United States maintains overseas bases.

At the same time, Service lawyers are responsible for advising active duty officers and men of their legal rights.

Here are a few samples of the works performed by military lawyers with a limited force of officers.

In 1956, JAG officers conducted 184,348 UCMJ trials and participated in 4,437 trials in foreign courts. During that year, Air Force lawyers handled $8 billion worth of Government contracts. And, in Fiscal Year 1957, AF JAG's handled 11,000 patent cases having a total value of approximately $3 billion.

Navy lawyers, during the same period, dealt with tort and admiralty cases involving several hundreds of millions of dollars worth of claims against the Government.

Service legal manpower officials estimate that they need a combined strength of at least 2,700 Regular career officers on board each year through 1962 in order to perform their functions effectively.

Experience Level Falls

In 1957 there were only 1,168 careerists on board. The picture will brighten a little in 1958 when augmentations of Reservists will increase the Regular strength to 1,430. In the succeeding years, however, the situation again becomes cloudy as experienced officers complete their 20 year careers. By 1962, the force of career officers will drop to a low of 1,062, considerably less than one-half the number the Services feel is a minimum manpower requirement.

As the experience level dwindles, the Services will be forced to place more and more juniors (two-track officers) in billets which require the experience of majors (lieutenant commanders) and lieutenant colonels (commanders).

The last official count of active duty officers, completed on 30 Nov. 1957, amounted to a total of 2,689.

Here's a breakdown:

	Army	Air Force	Navy
Col.-Capt.	129	60	63
Lt. Col.-Cdr.	158	137	168
Maj.-LCdr.	134	216	57
Capt.-Lt.	193	281	55
Lt.-Lt. (Jg) & Ens.	448	501	70
TOTAL	1,060	1,196	433

Captain Fitch said that current studies by the Navy JAG Office, headed by RADM. Chester C. Ward, show that it needs at least 575 officers to do the job the Navy needs to have done. The authorized strength of the Navy JAG will be 444 lawyers at the end of the year. Since the number of lawyers in the Navy is based on a percentage related to the number of Line officers, Captain Fitch said, the JAG Office can not shoot for the numbers it deems essential. Even if the Navy administratively raised the quota, JAG would not be able to meet its goal under present conditions, he said.

Based on the low authorized strength, Captain Fitch said, the Navy JAG Office will find itself short about 25 officers by 30 June.

Although the Navy maintains approximately 2,000 activities, lawyers are assigned to only 169 of the largest installations. Since a number of lawyers are in the pipeline, the Navy JAG Office is forced to spread about 400 officers among the 169 major activities. This amounts to 1.9 lawyers for each of the Navy's chief bases and fields.

Army Creates New Missile Planning Office; Gen. Medaris Will Head Redstone Unit

Lt. Gen. E. L. Cummings, Chief of Army Ordnance, has announced establishment of the Missile Planning Office at Redstone Arsenal, Ala., effective at once.

Maj. Gen. J. B. Medaris, who commands the Army Ballistic Missile Agency there, has been assigned as Chief of the new Office. He will also continue to command the Agency.

Members assigned to the office in addition to their present duties, include Maj. Gen. H. N. Toftoy, Commanding Redstone Arsenal; Col. H. S. Newhall, Commanding the Ordnance Guided Missile School; Col. J. G. Zierdt of ABMA, Col. H. N. Brownson of the Arsenal and Maj. W. B. Hawkins of the School. The latter three members are the principal control officers of their organizations.

Lt. Col. E. M. Graham was appointed full time executive secretary. The Office will be located in the Missile Agency.

Objectives Stated

Purpose of the new Office, described in an Ordnance Corps Order dated 3 Jan. 1958 is to assure that the following objectives are met:

"The development of long-range plans for military and scientific achievement in the missile and related fields, exercising the widest possible latitude in advanced thinking.

"The maintenance of an orderly and economical plan to take maximum advantage of all resources in the missile field, including providing for future resources in Government, industry and scientific institutions."

The Missile Planning Office will maintain long-range plans to achieve these goals. It will review plans and programs of all Ordnance installations and activities primarily engaged in missile work, including proposals to use industrial or other contractors and Government installations in Army missile projects.

Advise Ordnance Chief

The Office will make recommendations to the Chief of Ordnance and to installation and activity commanders consistent with its operating charter, and will report significant developments to the Chief of Ordnance.

The Ordnance Corps Order states that it "in no way alters the responsibilities of the Commanding Generals of the Army Ballistic Missile Agency and Redstone Arsenal and the Commanding Officer of the Ordnance Guided Missile School with reference to their assigned missions."

Is it possible to build a MAN?

"Theoretically, yes," said the scientist. "Or a reasonably remarkable imitation—a kind of mechanical analogue. Call it a habit machine, a mechanism operating according to the laws of the conditioned reflex."

You mean that you could actually build a mechanical mind? One that would exhibit emotions—such as love, fear, anger, loyalty?

"We're doing something like that now in advanced missile development," the scientist replied. "In a limited, highly specialized way, of course."

"Take the 'pilot' that is being developed for the big long-range missile. He has a wonderful memory, and can solve many complex navigational problems in a flash. He loves perfection, and actually becomes highly excited when he gets off course. He's a tough-skinned character, impervious to the cold at several hundred miles altitude and the incredible heat at re-entry. And his loyalty is heroic. His life is a single mission, the mission his whole life...and maybe ours, too. He's a pretty important fellow."

What about the complete man-made Man? What would that entail?

"A mechanism the size of the capitol in Washington, and the best scientific resources in the world. But it could be done. You see, it's only a question of how physical matter is organized. As a great biophysicist explained, 'If material is organized in a certain way, it will walk like a man. If it is organized in another way, it will fly like a missile.'"

Still, wouldn't there be something missing in the complete man-made Man—something very important?

"Yes," said the scientist. "A soul."

Navy, MC Will Close Four Air Stations

The Marine Corps Air Station at Miami, Fla., will be shut down 15 October, with three other Navy air stations also slated for closing.

Disestablishment of the Navy Air Station, Atlantic City, N. J., has been scheduled for 15 July. Cabaniss Field, Corpus Christi, Tex., will follow by 1 October.

The last station to be closed will be the Auxiliary Naval Air Station, Edenton, N. C., about 31 March 1959.

Over 7,000 Navy and Marine Corps personnel will be reassigned as a result of the moves. Approximately 1,100 civilian employees will be affected. The Navy estimated its savings as a result of the reductions at about $8 million yearly.

The Pentagon said:

"The four stations are being closed because of the necessity for reductions in aircraft, personnel, and associated bases in the naval aviation establishment."

RAdm. Tyree Moves, Other Flag Changes

RAdm. David M. Tyree, Superintendent, Naval Gun Factory, Washington, D. C., has been named Commander, Task Group 7.3, Washington, D. C.

RAdm. French R. Moore, MC, will move from Inspector General, Medical Department Activities, to District Medical Officer, Fifth Naval District, Norfolk, Va., in February.

RAdm. Edward C. Kenney, MC, goes from Commanding Officer, U. S. Naval Hospital, Bethesda, Md., to Assistant Chief, Bureau of Medicine and Surgery for Professional and Personnel Operations, in March.

RAdm. Irwin L. V. Norman, MC, Assistant Chief, Bureau of Medicine and Surgery for Professional and Personnel Operations, becomes Inspector General, Medical Department Activities, in March.

Maj. Simons Chosen For Chamber Award

Maj. David G. Simons, USAF, of the Aero Medical Field Laboratory, Holloman AFB, N. Mex., has been named one of the 10 outstanding young men for 1957 by the United States Junior Chamber of Commerce.

The Chamber cited Major Simons' material contributions to space flight knowledge, in the course of which he made a record 102,000 foot balloon flight. The Chamber noted that he is a "pioneer of society's newest profession of space medicine."

A special banquet honoring Major Simons and the other nine award winners has been set for 18 January in Phoenix, Ariz.

TAC's 12th Air Force Claims It Is Fastest

The Tactical Air Command's 12th Air Force at Waco, Tex., has become the first Air Force command with all tactical aircraft in the "Century Series."

According to TAC spokesmen, the command has become "all-supersonic, the fastest outfit in the U. S. Air Force with a global mission and nuclear weapons capability."

The organization, which commands all TAC fighter and fighter-bomber wings and bases west of the Mississippi River, is now equipped with F-100C Supersabre day fighters, F-100D Supersabre fighter bombers, and F-101A Voodoo fighter bombers.

More advanced planes, including the F-104 Starfighter and the F-105 Thunderchief, spokesmen say, will eventually be assigned to 12th Air Force combat wings.

Hunter Is Safest SAC Installation

Hunter AFB, Ga., topped all other SAC bases to win the rotating Base of the Year Flying Safety Award for 1957.

The Second Air Force Base obtained custody of the two and a half foot-high silver trophy by remaining completely accident-free during 1957 while its units logged over 50,000 hours flying time.

Col. Ralph Stanley, SAC safety chief, said that six other SAC bases had accident-free records for the year but lost out to Hunter because they had logged fewer flying hours. In the order of their final standing they were: Mountain Home AFB, Malmstrom AFB, Ramey AFB, Ellsworth AFB, Dow AFB and Travis AFB.

Final standing of other bases in the command were: 9-MacDill, 10-Forbes, 11-March, 12-Davis-Monthan, 13-Schilling, 14-Lincoln, 15-Lake Charles, 16-Lockbourne, 17-Little Rock (1956 winner), 18-Dyess, 19-Westover, 20-Walker, 21-Offutt, 22-Homestead, 23-Carswell, 24-Biggs, 25-Castle, 26-Whiteman, 27-Plattsburgh, 28-Pease, 29-Pinecastle, 30-Loring, 31-Altus, 32-Fairchild, and 33-Laughlin.

Air Force Cuts Promotions In FY '59; Regular Officer Ranks Will Double

The Air Force will promote 18,695 officers during the fiscal year beginning 1 July 1958. This is 2,000 fewer promotions than were scheduled to be made this fiscal year.

The Air Force says it will promote 3,319 officers to field and general officer grades, and 15,376 to the ranks of first lieutenant and captain.

This compares with 3,420 promotions to field and general officer grades, and 20,799 company grade promotions programmed for fiscal '58.

Here is the way the promotions will break down in the new fiscal year, compared with fiscal years 1957 and 1958:

To	FY 1959	FY 1958	FY 1957
General	39	52	30
Colonel	320	308	302
Lt. Colonel ..	960	960	962
Major	2,000	2,100	1,998
Captain	5,964	5,859	5,283
1st Lieutenant	9,412	11,520	18,372
Total	18,695	20,799	26,947

The Air Force said promotions in fiscal '59 will not bring the assigned-by-grade strength up to requirements in the higher grades by the end of the fiscal year, but, because of the need to provide continuing opportunities for advancement, "the difference between assigned strength and requirements will be phased over a period of years."

This means, the Air Force said, that many officers will be required to perform duties "for a few years" in lower grades than those required by the positions they fill.

The minimum number of months in grade required for promotion consideration will remain the same during fiscal '59: 48 months for promotion to colonel and lieutenant colonel; 60 months for promotion to major; 36 for captain and 18 for first lieutenant. The actual time in grade of officers selected for promotion exceeds this criteria, however.

Selection ratios will be increased in fiscal '59. The following table shows the ratio of eligibles to those promoted:

	FY 1959 (Estimate)	FY 1958	FY 1957
Col. ...	1 to 24.3	1 to 21.4	1 to 21.7
Lt. Col.	1 to 17.4	1 to 15.5	1 to 14.9
Maj. ...	1 to 9.4	1 to 7.5	1 to 9.2
Capt. ...	1 to 2.0	1 to 2.0	1 to 1.9

Between 30 September 1957 and 30 June 1959, the Air Force will almost double its Regular officer ranks, while dropping from an active duty officer strength of 134,491 to 124,720. Here are the comparative figures:

	Regular		Non-Regular		Total
	Sept 57	July 59	Sept 57	July 59	Sept 57	July 59
General	418	413	12	11	430	424
Colonel	4,051	4,280	601	591	4,652	4,871
Lt. Colonel	5,611	6,223	4,016	3,789	9,627	10,012
Major	6,405	9,467	15,806	12,786	22,211	22,253
Captain	5,310	18,973	36,496	25,214	41,806	44,187
1st Lieutenant ...	3,987	8,794	37,749	26,533	41,736	35,327
2d Lieutenant ...	826	1,250	13,203	6,396	14,029	7,646

AF Offers Regular MC-DC Commissions

The Air Force has detailed the procedures by which both civilian and military applicants may receive Regular appointments to the Medical and Dental Corps.

The procedures and qualifications, given in AFR 36-21, authorize temporary grades equal to the present active duty grade for Reserve officers.

All medical and dental officers who have completed 12 months experience since graduating from medical or dental school will be appointed to the permanent grade of first lieutenant and the temporary grade of captain.

The regulation authorizes appointment to the permanent grades of first lieutenant through lieutenant colonel, depending upon length of experience. All permanent appointments, says the regulation, will be probationary for three years.

Lt. Tichenor To Warren OIS

1st Lt. Joe W. Tichenor, recently returned from Kimpo, Korea, has been assigned to the Office of Information Services, Warren AFB, Wyo. He was accompanied by his wife, Margaret, and their two year old son.

Congress' Responsibility. We fear that the Department of Defense has made an unnecessary and costly error in peremptorily rejecting the request of Representative Overton Brooks (D-La.) to suspend the involuntary release of Air Force and Navy Reserve officers until his subcommittee has had an opportunity to study the situation. Mr. Brooks' request was supported by Representative Carl Vinson (D-Ga.), Chairman of the House Armed Services Committee. He also was told that the Department of Defense would not look with favor on giving "so much as a temporary delay" to the involuntary release of these Reserve officers.

The Department had nothing to lose and a great deal to gain by complying with the request of the Committee members. It is true, as the Defense Department contended, that many difficult factors would have been involved in holding up the RIF action. But the Committee was prepared to (and actually did) begin hearings on the subject at once. Surely, the Department could have found some way to delay further its RIF's until the Committee was satisfied as to their necessity.

As it is, the members of Congress who are charged with military legislation feel that they have been treated in a high-handed manner. The testimony of Assistant Secretary William H. Francis, jr., in his appearance before them, did little to dispel this impression.

The first committee reaction has been to pose the question, "why should we increase pay as a means of retaining Service personnel at the same time we are discharging those who want to remain?" Here, too, the Department has been remiss in not making it clear that the RIF program intensifies the difficulty of retaining good men. The RIF program, imposed on the Services by the economy regime, is forcing out many highly qualified officers. Those remaining are bound to feel less secure—"this could happen to me!" Therefore, without sound personnel management, such as that offered by the Cordiner Plan, these men could more easily be wooed away by better offers from industry. The Department would do well in its presentation to Congress to stress the importance of the pay bill in retaining men of the highest caliber and eventually raising the over-all quality of Service personnel.

The Constitution imposes upon Congress the responsibility "to provide for the common defense." Officials of the Defense Department must recognize this responsibility and work closely with the members of Congress.

Missile Management. VAdm. J. H. Sides, Director of the Weapon Systems Evaluation Group, in a speech to the American Management Association, has effectively exposed the shortcomings of the popular argument that there should be a separate agency for the development of missiles. "We have often heard it said," the Admiral recalled, "that it is not important to make an early decision as to the eventual user" of a weapon system, "that this can await the completion of the development. This philosophy, in my opinion, is a fallacious one."

The real tasks, Admiral Sides reported, are the development of ground support equipment that fits a particular Service's philosophy of operation, the development of a production capacity, a logistic support system, a training program. These tasks, he said, cannot wait for completion of development; they should be developed by the Service which will employ the system.

The time saved and efficiency gained by the Army, the Navy, and the Air Force, in planning the logistics, tactics, and training pertaining to a particular missile concurrently with the development of that missile puts the initial operational date well ahead of what it would be if the development by an independent agency was followed by a determination of the Service to which it would be allotted, and then tactics, logistics, and training had to be worked out.

Under present circumstances, when Bomarc, Thor, Atlas, and Jupiter are ready, the Air Force will be prepared to use them. The Army was ready for Nike when that weapon was put into production, and already it has organized a Redstone unit prepared to accept the new system.

The Navy's Position

Editor, THE JOURNAL:

Thank you for printing Admiral Burke's speech to the National Press Club. His speech and answers to questions succinctly presents an official Navy position. May I respectfully submit one citizen's opinion concerning the major topic discussed?

Admiral Burke carried the reasoning for more unification and centralized direction of the Armed Forces to infinity when he pointed out that it could lead to the disbandment of Congress. (His remarks seem neatly calculated to reduce the possibility of implementing legislation.) An extension of his logic would mean having a compromising committee rather than unity of command in the person of a ship's captain.

Why not face up to the fact that we have no national strategy? The Army, Navy and Air Force, for example, each teaches different command relationships and phasings for an amphibious operation. Lengthy negotiations must precede even a joint training exercise to resolve how that one specific operation will be conducted.

One who proposes simple solutions to the problem of resolving the different services' viewpoints is himself naive and simple. However, surely we cannot just shrug off our failures because it is easier to permit overlap and divergencies than to develop national strategic doctrine.

Mr. George F. Kennan once wrote, "A nation which excuses its own failures by the sacred untouchableness of its own habits can excuse itself into complete disaster." It becomes increasingly important that resources for national defense be expended in the most effective and efficient manner. The lack of objectivity that the official Navy attitude encourages could cause us to lose the next war!

Seeks Information

Editor, THE JOURNAL:

The writer is seeking information on the following two persons: Peter Plotpapas and Kenji Arita, both of whom served with the U. S. occupation forces in Japan following the close of World War II. Their headquarters were located at Mitsubishi Naka No. 8 Building, Marunouchi, Chiyoda-ku, Tokyo, and they were quartered at U. S. House, San-o, Omori, Daiden-ku, Tokyo.

Shortly after the arrival of Peter Plotpapas in Tokyo as a member of the occupation forces, his first child was born at the St. Mary Hospital,

The Navy put the Regulus and Sidewinder directly into the Fleet and when Polaris is perfected it will have the submarines and men to make it operational.

"Deviation from this concept," Admiral Sides said, "will certainly invite widespread confusion and will result in excess costs, unnecessary delays, and inferior end products." We agree.

Reorganization? It will be well if there is no precipitate rush to bring about a reorganization in the Department of Defense and its military leadership. There is a current tendency to blame every shortcoming, real and imagined, on lack of organization and growth of inter-service rivalry. Actually there is ample authority at the top of the Department of Defense to do virtually anything that it may consider necessary—in fact, there are too many offices at the top exercising this authority. A weeding out would appear more needed than a building up of organizations. As to the military leadership, there is much to say for the Joint Chiefs of Staff system. It does assure the representatives of each service a voice. It has the further merit in that the Service representative who helps make the key decisions also is charged with carrying them out and interpreting to his own Service. Cool and orderly consideration may find the necessity for evolutionary changes but it would be dangerous to rush into them.

QUOTES FROM THE JOURNAL

10 Years Ago (24 Jan. 1948)—General Omar N. Bradley, who will succeed General of the Army Dwight D. Eisenhower as Chief of Staff of the Army, declared that to attract the proper kind of officers and men to the Services "we must be able to offer them the emoluments, opportunities, and privileges they would have in civilian life."

50 Years Ago (25 Jan. 1908)—"It is believed the question of the color, texture and cut of the Service uniform can be settled . . . The Army has just passed through a period of change extending over several years. Such changes are always demoralizing, and it is believed no further changes are advisable."

90 Years Ago (25 Jan. 1868)—A fixed expectation of war with Prussia is held by all the Danes. They favor the sale of St. Thomas to the United States, and unanimously declare that the £2,000,000 which they will receive for it must be put by for the emergencies of the coming struggle.

Shita-Ochiai, Shinjiku, Tokyo. The event was much publicized in papers in Japan and abroad. His parents or relatives were said to be living in New York. The date of his departure from Japan is unknown.

Kenji Arita was a Nisei private in the American Army. After his return to America, information was received that he was traveling in Lebanon. No further news has been received.

The writer worked for the American Army in Japan and was aided materially by these two individuals during a grave illness in August 1948.

Any information about their present location will be appreciated.

A Blow to Morale

Editor, THE JOURNAL:

Keep up the good work on the proposed Pay Bill!

Next, I hope you can do something to help ease the present dearth of promotions. For example, the Army had no temporary brigadier general promotion board during the calendar year of 1957. This has been quite a blow to morale for those who haven't had a chance to go to bat yet.

COLONEL, USA

USMC Hq. Revises LDO-WO Program

Marine Corps Headquarters has completely revised its Warrant Officer-Limited Duty Officer selection program for Fiscal Year 1959.

Under the revised program, tests for WO and LDO applicants are dropped and replaced by an evaluation sheet, a special fitness report and establishment of the requirement that individual applicants appear before a command review board for screening.

In addition, for the first time since the program was initiated in 1955, both Regular and Reserve WO candidates will be considered by the same board.

Those desiring consideration for the 1959 program must submit applications to their commanding officer or immediate superior for nomination. The commanding officer, in turn, will nominate to the appropriate screening board only those applicants who are highly qualified in the MOS field for which they are applying.

Eligibility Requirements

In order to be eligible for the LDO program, applicants must be temporary commissioned officers, temporary or permanent warrants of the Regular Corps, sergeants major, first sergeants, Regular master sergeants or technical sergeants. They must not have reached their 43rd birthday on 1 July 1958 and must have completed at least 10 years' active Naval service but less than 12 years on 1 July 1958, exclusive of active duty for training time.

To be eligible for the WO program, applicants must be temporary commissioned officers and temporary warrant officers, Regular or Reserve on active duty; permanent Reserve officers who will be on active duty on 1 July 1958 and who were former enlisted men, sergeants major, first sergeants, Regular male or female, master sergeants or technical sergeants. They must not have reached their 46th birthday on 1 July and must have less than 19 years, six months active service on that date.

At the same time, both male and female master sergeants and technical sergeants of the organized Marine Corps Reserve and Reservists of the same ranks on extended active duty with the Regular or Reserve establishments are eligible to make application. They too, however, may not have more than 19 years, six months active service by 1 July.

Double Nomination

Regulars nominated for the LDO program may also be nominated for Regular WO. Separate nominations will be required if a man is recommended for both programs.

Personnel competing under the Regular program may be nominated for only one specific MOS as listed in Marine Corps Orders 1040.7. Those competing in the women and Reserve programs will not be selected according to MOS; but on a best qualified basis.

Sets Deadlines

Nominations to be considered by the Headquarters Marine Corps screening board must reach HQMC not later than 31 March. Approved nominations considered by field screening boards must reach HQMC not later than 30 April. Nominations received after these dates will not be given consideration.

Average AF Officer Is 32.5 Years Old

The average Air Force officer on active duty today is 32.5 years of age.

The range goes from 23.8 for second lieutenants to 49.4 in general officer ranks.

Information Officer "Indispensable" Member of Command Staff

BY WILBER M. BRUCKER
Secretary of the Army

THE field of Army Information—troop information and public information—has unprecedented importance today in the conduct of our military affairs, and the information officer as a skilled practitioner in this field is an indispensable member of the command staff.

As Secretary of the Army, I am frequently confronted with problems which either directly or indirectly involve public information, community relations, or troop information, for there are few things in which the Army is involved that do not have some public or troop impact. Nearly every day the Army Chief of Information or his Deputy, or a member of their staff, is summoned to my office to confer on matters affecting Army public relations.

The Chief of Information is probably concerned with a broader variety of problems than most other staff members, and because of his broad interest in our business, he must of necessity keep abreast of Army actions. Conversely, he must be kept informed by the staff. This is the staff relationship that I am sure exists wherever there are Army Information Officers. This is the way it should be for, after all, much depends upon the initiative, perception, and competence of those who conduct the information program.

The Chief of Information is probably concerned with a broader variety of problems than most other staff members, and because of his broad interest in our business, he must of necessity keep abreast of Army actions. Conversely, he must be kept informed by the staff. This is the staff relationship that I am sure exists wherever there are Army Information Officers. This is the way it should be for, after all, much depends upon the initiative, perception, and competence of those who conduct the information program.

World's "Most Serious" Business

As members of the Defense Team we are in what is probably the most serious business in the world—that of guaranteeing to the citizens of this great country of ours the peace and security to which they are entitled. To accomplish this, the Army must have strong public support, and must be held in highest esteem by the American people. But we cannot obtain strong support and respect unless our vast citizenry grasps the meaning of what we are striving to accomplish.

Public understanding of the Army—not only in this country but in allied countries as well—is the foundation of public confidence which is a fundamental requirement if we are to carry out our mission effectively.

It is imperative, therefore, that the public be kept as well informed as security will allow. They must know our plans, our requirements, and our day-to-day progress in meeting our grave responsibilities. Only then can we make them aware of the Army's ability to preserve the peace and of our readiness to fight the communist conspiracy in either a large scale war, or a limited conflict, with either nuclear or conventional weapons.

The American people respect the United States Army. They have faith in our ability to accomplish the gigantic job before us, as we have always done in the past. They believe in us because they understand us, and they understand us because they are generally kept well informed about their Army.

Sound Information Program Essential

Certainly, it would be an understatement to say that we have a long, difficult road ahead of us. We must, each of us, face squarely the great challenge of the age in which we live, and do our full part to meet that challenge with determination and fortitude. In the light of recent progress and developments in the field of science, and particularly in the area of guided missiles, by both this country and the Soviet Union, it is more important than ever before that we recognize that a sound information program is an essential factor of success.

Public information and troop information are inseparable—one complements the other. It would be futile to try to develop and maintain an effective public information program without well informed military personnel to support it. The soldier represents the Army as he understands it. He interprets Army actions and policies as they are understood by him, and unless he is properly oriented and kept informed, he can, by misinterpretation alone, defeat the most energetic and well directed community and public relations program.

Community relations are extremely important to the Army. They constitute a barometer by which we may determine our standing among the American people. It is important that the men and women of the Army, and their families, too, become accepted neighbors in local communities, and that they be acknowledged as contributors to the betterment and progress of community life. The prestige of the Army can be immeasurably enhanced when Army people are recognized for their active and constructive participation in community life.

Not Just For Fires

The relationship between the Information Officer and his commander is of primary importance to the accomplishment of our mission. It is essential that the Information Officer should not be used primarily to "put out fires"—although sometimes this cannot be helped—but rather as a competent advisor to the commander in evaluating actions so that the fires will not get started in the first place.

I am well aware of the fine job being done by the Army information officers throughout the world. I extend my sincere appreciation to them and their staffs for the contribution which they have made, and are making, to the accomplishment of our mission. I am fully convinced that no one ever has had anything as magnificent to portray to the American people as we have—the great United States Army.

Editor's Note: Secretary Brucker addressed the annual conference of Army Information Officers last month at the Pentagon. This article was especially prepared for THE JOURNAL at our request, and conveys in substance the importance given to the field of information and those performing the job, as expressed by the Secretary during the conference.

Army-Air Force Anti-ICBM Roles Stated By Secretary McElroy

The Pentagon on 18 January released the following statement which tells how the Army and Air Force are to share responsibility for development of defenses against the ICBM.

Here is the text of the announcement:

"In November 1956, the Secretary of Defense made a decision with respect to the responsibilities of the Army and Air Force in the field of air defense which assigned the 'point defense' responsibilities to the Army, and the 'area defense' responsibilities to the Air Force. Looking ahead to advances in technology, he recognized that these definitions might not be applicable to the defense against the ICBM and further classification would be necessary to prevent unwarranted duplication of AICBM effort.

"Accordingly, he directed the Army to concentrate on the missile and launch system and target tracking radars associated with system components. He directed the Air Force to concentrate on that part of the problem related to early warning and defense acquisition radars. It was clear that this would result in some duplication of radar effort, but the radar problem was the most difficult aspect of this very urgent defense requirement. This duplication was considered necessary to an early and best solution to the problem.

"This development effort has been progressing steadily. In fact, this program has advanced to the point that a second missile and missile launch system has been proposed for development. Realizing that further clarification of responsibilities was required, the Secretary of Defense has sent memos to the Secretary of the Army and Air Force with reference to this future development effort within the two Services, as it pertains to defense against the ICBM.

"The essence of these memorandums is as follows: The Air Force is to continue as a matter of urgency to concentrate on that part of its WIZARD program that pertains to the radar and data handling aspects including its relationship to SAGE and other radar capabilities. The Army is to continue its current development effort in the NIKE-ZEUS program as a matter of urgency, concentrating on system developments to demonstrate the feasibility of achieving an effective defense against the ICBM. Both Services are directed to arrange for the closest possible cooperation among contractors so that the ultimate system to be developed by the Director of the ARPA will find that all of these major system components will be mutually compatible.

"No significant changes can be made in these programs without the specific approval of the Director of ARPA. The Director of Guided Missiles is to act in this capacity until the ARPA is established."

memo

SEC DEF McELROY'S PLAN for new consultations on defense organization (Page 16) adds significance to a little-mentioned study made by the Wheeler Committee for the JCS. The Committee, composed of General and flag officers of all the Services, was asked to report in detail on what is wrong—if anything—with current Pentagon organization. It is a good guess that the Wheeler report, given no publicity, makes no proposals for sweeping changes similar to those recommended in the Gaither and Rockefeller Reports.

THE JCS COMMITTEE is headed by Maj. Gen. Earle G. Wheeler, USA. Other members are Maj. Gen. John B. Cary, USAF; Rear Adm. Ephraim P. Holmes, USN; and Brig. Gen. Richard C. Mangrum, USMC.

WHEN THE CHIPS ARE DOWN, it could be the heretofore obscured Wheeler Report that has the most influence on the forthcoming changes and not the more widely heralded studies. The Wheeler Committee recommendations are based on actual day-to-day operations.

IT'S AN INTERESTING QUESTION whether Secretary McElroy and his consultants will invite Lt. Gen. James M. Gavin to give his views on the JCS structure. The General, who retires at the end of March, has urged major changes. Gen. Maxwell D. Taylor, Army Chief of Staff, told the National Press Club recently that while he did not agree with the conclusions, General Gavin's views certainly should be studied by any top level group looking at the JCS problem. General Gavin is, of course, currently a "lame duck" Research and Development chief.

RESTRICTIVE LEGISLATION on the employment of retired military personnel will be investigated by the National Committee on the Aging, whose Chairman is G. Warfield Hobbs, Vice President of the First National City Bank of New York. He has advised The Journal that the limitations on jobs for retired military people will be placed on the Committee's agenda.

COLLEGE FACULTY BRIEFINGS are being scheduled by the Air Force on campuses and bases. Aim is to acquaint university leaders with the Air Force because "faculty influence plays a vital role in moulding student attitudes."

AIR FORCE COMMANDERS are being told to discourage establishment of associations of personnel based on grade, such as the AF Warrant Officer Association. Headquarters says: "It is felt that because such groups promote the interests of one segment of Air Force personnel, they tend to militate against the common interest of other grades."

THE SERVICES ARE WARNING military personnel that they may be the target of Communist propaganda, particularly in the cases of men who have foreign-born wives with relatives living in Communist-controlled areas. The Air Force has urged commanders to warn their people about such propaganda and to make sure they report immediately receipt of any suspicious material.

GENERAL AND ADMIRAL promotions will slump as a result of manpower cuts. The Air Force, which plans 52 general advancements to brigadier general this fiscal year, will make only 39 in the year starting 1 July.

THE ANTI-MISSILE DEFENSE DRIVE will see Air Force shortly award a multi-million dollar contract, probably close to $500,000,000, for new long-range radar facilities giving a 10 or 15 minute warning of ICBM attack. Radio Corporation of America has been chosen to manage new system.

A MAJOR REASON why the Air Force will move speedily—possibly as soon as the supplemental appropriations request is cleared—is the desire to take advantage of Spring and Summer months in DEW Line area, where some of new equipment will be located.

THE LONG-RANGE RADAR is said to represent a major "break through" in the AICBM program, and Congress has speedily endorsed Air Force plans. RCA was selected only last December.

NEW ATTACKS ON PX'S are feared during current session of Congress. Best guess is retail groups will not attempt to press their campaign before Armed Services Committees, which have studied PX situation thoroughly, but instead will make bid to curtail PX activities before Appropriations Committees.

SUSPICIOUS CONGRESSMEN who have looked askance at Pentagon plan to set up new term-retention contracts for Reserve officers, have had their suspicions confirmed. Many of them believed the proposal was designed specifically to permit the Services to get rid of Reservists. VADM. James L. Holloway, jr., Chief of Naval Personnel, frankly admits this is so. He told a Congressional committee that one reason the Navy wants the legislation is because it will permit the Navy to use Reserve officers "for ten years," give them big bonuses "and send them home."

IT CAN BE EXPECTED that Service spokesmen on Capitol Hill will be careful in discussing the need to modify longevity pay. One reason is that Members of Congress have a deep appreciation for longevity—it determines in large part their committee assignments—and would not be sympathetic to any suggestion of broadside attack on this concept. Labor unions also would not cheer if the Pentagon hit too sharply the longevity principle.

BUT THE POINT MUST BE MADE that the traditional military longevity system, with its inversion of pay, needs to be modified to meet current requirements. This can be done by giving added stress to "time in grade" (as opposed to total time in service) aspect of the Cordiner recommendations.

THERE HAS BEEN PERHAPS too much talk that the pay plan is intended to reward the electronic technician, who is in a critical shortage category, instead of the cook, who may be in a "soft skill" area as regards total numbers. The point has been overlooked—it needs to be emphasized—that the Cordiner Plan provides substantial rewards for the good cook, as well as the electronic technician.

THE AIR FORCE LOST 120 Service Academy graduates by resignation during the year ended 1 December '57, Congress has been advised. Evenly divided, there were 59 USMA and 61 USNA Air Force resignations. A total of 232 Regular officers resigned during the 12-month period, including 1 colonel, 4 lieutenant colonels, 37 majors, 90 captains and 100 lieutenants.

Defense Reorganization Will Follow "Consultant" Study Ordered By SecDef

A new reorganization of the Defense Department that may compare with changes made five years ago this April is in the offing.

It was in April, 1953 that President Eisenhower in Reorganization Plan No. 6 altered the Pentagon structure.

Another "new look" is being taken at the military organization at the request of the Chief Executive.

Secretary of Defense Neil H. McElroy told a noon news conference 21 January that five persons have been named "consultant" to help him study the organization of the Defense Department and to recommend changes.

The consultants—they are not designated as a "committee"—are:
William C. Foster, a former Deputy Secretary of Defense.

Nelson A. Rockefeller, chairman of the President's Advisory Committee on Government Organization.

Gen. of the Army Omar N. Bradley, a former chairman of the JCS.

Adm. Arthur W. Radford, USN-Ret., the former JCS chairman.

Gen. Nathan F. Twining, USAF, JCS chairman.

Secretary McElroy also announced the appointment of former Assistant Secretary of Defense Charles A. Coolidge as a full-time "special assistant" to help in the Defense organization study. Mr. McElroy told newsmen the new study "will proceed under forced draft."

The group will meet with military and civilian officials to discuss Defense Department organization problems.

It is likely that some of the sessions will be held away from Washington—possibly at Key West, Fla., where the basic roles and missions agreement was hammered out in 1948.

It is interesting to note that five years after the original Key West agreement, major changes in the Defense Department organization were made.

Now, after another five years, it appears that new modifications will be in order.

Interesting also is the fact that the 1953 changes followed publication of the study made by the Rockefeller Commission. The 1958 changes also will come on the heels of a study on National Defense planning headed by Mr. Rockefeller.

In 1953, President Eisenhower took action to strengthen the responsibility of the Secretary of Defense for "direction and control" of the armed forces.

The 1958 changes can be expected to provide the Secretary with a better system to carry out his responsibilities.

It is likely that the forthcoming action will raise the stature of the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff. There is also speculation that Secretary McElroy may seek authority for appointment of a top-level Director of Military Operations who would be responsible directly to him for supervising the execution of strategy and operations laid out by the Joint Chiefs.

Numerous appeals have been made for the appointment of a single Chief of Staff of all the Armed Forces, but this does not seem a probable result of the current study.

SecNav Asks "Pay For Worth" In NSIA Address

Asserting that dedicated young officers and men, scientists and technicians are the Nation's "greatest military resource," Secretary of the Navy Thomas S. Gates, jr., has declared: "We must find a means to pay them in accordance with their worth."

Speaking before the 9 January luncheon of the National Security Industrial Association at the Mayflower Hotel, Washington, D. C., the Secretary deviated from the text of a prepared speech to stress that it is essential that outstanding young men "can find in our Armed Forces a worthy and attractive career."

The Navy, he said, has trained "hundreds of thousands of people only to see them lost to industry."

Cdr. Jenkins Heads Ship Squadron Three

Cdr. Charles W. Jenkins, Officer-in-Charge, Special Weapons School, Norfolk, Va., has succeeded Cdr. Walter A. McGuinness as Commander, Landing Ship Squadron Three, Pacific Fleet Amphibious Force.

Commander McGuinness is Force Readiness Officer on the Staff of Commander, Pacific Fleet Amphibious Force, with Headquarters at Coronado, Calif.

Both officers are 1939 graduates of USNA. Each has three children and resides with their families at Coronado.

Naval Lab Develops Missile Training Aid

Scientists at the Naval Ordnance Laboratory, Silver Spring, Md., have developed a precision electronic device that tells anti-aircraft gunners how close their missiles come to targets.

Known as the "miss-distance indicator," the device records the distance in feet that a missile failed to hit a target. The system is adaptable to rockets, supersonic missiles or conventional artillery shells. It was designed to speed and intensify the training of missile crews.

The MDI is made up of three high-frequency radio units; a tiny transmitter in the missile; a receiver-recorder on board the missile launching ship, and a so-called "transponder," or relay station, inside the target itself.

Col. Cram Wins Master Mechanic Membership

Col. Jack R. Cram, Commanding Officer, MCAS, Kaneohe Bay, T.H., has been elected to Honorary Membership in the Pearl Harbor Association of Master Mechanics and Foremen of the 14th Naval District.

He is the first Marine to receive the honor.

At the same time, he was nominated for an Honorary Membership in the National Association.

A Navy Cross winner for heroism during WWII, the Colonel also wears the Legion of Merit with Combat V, the Distinguished Flying Cross with three stars and the Air Medal with 12 stars.

SERVICE FAMILY NOTES

A TRIO OF SERVICE JUNIORS pay a visit to Admiral Felix B. Stump, Commander in Chief Pacific, at his Pearl Harbor headquarters. For Cub Scout Ronnie Fairless, Boy Scout Michael Gerrells and Explorer Scout Carl Sachs, Jr. (l. to r.) the Admiral's rank is incidental; they called to present him his badge of office as honorary president of the Far East Council, Boy Scouts of America, and the 1958 scout calendar. The three scouts are sons of officers attached to CINCPAC and CINCPACFLT staffs: Lt. Col. C. D. Fairless, USAF, Lt. Col. Travis Gerrells, USA, and Lt. Col. Carl Sachs, USMC.

MRS. Wilber M. Brucker, wife of the Secretary of the Army, headed the list of honor guests at a "coffee" given by the Washington Quartermaster Women's Club, 23 January, at the Army-Navy Country Club. Honored with Mrs. Brucker were Mesdames Charles C. Finucane, wife of the Under Secretary of the Army, and George H. Roderick and Dewey H. Short, whose husbands are Assistant Secretaries of the Army. Mrs. Andrew T. McNamara, wife of the Army Quartermaster General, and Mrs. Beverly Boyle, Jr., Club President, assisted the guests in receiving.

Chairman for the affair was Mrs. James C. Pennington, assisted by the wives of Quartermaster officers serving with DCS/LOG. Pouring were Mesdames R. B. Taylor, W. M. Johnson, R. B. Prah, W. G. McIlhiney, W. L. Tate and R. M. Werner. Mesdames F. K. Eberhard, L. Hanks, G. M. Calvert and R. Maysonave served as hostesses.

DCS/LOG OWC—

The January meeting of the Officers Wives' Club of the Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Logistics was a luncheon held at Patton Hall, Ft. Myer, on 15 January.

The speaker at the luncheon was the Honorable Frank H. Higgins, Assistant Secretary of the Army (Logistics) and his topic was "The Business Side of the Army."

Appeals Court Limits Military Libel Immunity

The U. S. Court of Appeals has ruled that military officers do not possess an unlimited immunity from libel suits in forwarding of reports to Congress.

Press dispatches originating from Boston reported this week the ruling in a suit by the Federal Employees Veterans Association against RADM. W. E. Howard, Commander of the Boston Naval Shipyard. The suit stemmed from a letter written by Admiral Howard to the head of the Bureau of Ships in Washington concerning the activities of the Association, an employee group.

Copies of the letter were sent to Massachusetts members of Congress.

The court's opinion, the press reports state, holds that communications to Congress should be protected by a qualified or conditional privilege with regard to liability for defamatory contents. It would be an unwelcome thing, the court stated, to extend to this situation the protection of an absolute immunity such as has been held to apply to official reports to a superior officer.

Court Of Claims Rules In Favor Of Retired Officers Who Are Recalled

The Court of Claims handed down 15 January two decisions that are of considerable interest to retired Regular officers.

The Court ruled on a question that has been much discussed in recent years, namely whether retired officers recalled to active duty and subsequently released are considered to have been re-retired with computation of pay based on their total length of service, active and inactive.

Col. Edward L. Field, and Lt. Col. Walter L. Sherfey, both veterans of World War I, who had been retired for disability prior to World War II and were recalled to active duty during that conflict, brought action for increased retired pay under the Pay Readjustment Act of 1942.

The Court of Claims held unanimously in each case that the officers were entitled, upon re-retirement after World War II, to be paid at the rate of 75 per cent of the active duty pay they were receiving on the date of the last retirement.

Back pay was awarded for six years prior to the time they brought suit. Their claims for pay prior to that time were held to be barred by the statute of limitations. Colonel Field and Colonel Sherfey both were represented by Col. Guy Emery, USA-Ret., of the law firm of Emery and Wood of Washington.

The Field decision is No. 525-53; that of Col. Sherfey, No. 324-56.

Col. Lally Ordered To D. C.

Col. Lawrence D. Lally has been ordered to the Office, Chief of Transportation, Department of the Army, Washington, D. C. and will report in March.

For the past three years, he has been the Transportation Officer, U. S. Army Communication Zone, Europe at Orleans, France.

Warrant Officer Pay

The new pay legislation (see story on first page of this issue) provides the following scale for Warrant Officers (last week's issue published the new Officer and enlisted rates):

	Base Rate	After 2 Yrs. in Grade	After 4 Years
W-4	$530	$557	$585
W-3	462	484	506
W-2	396	418	440
W-1	350	373

The new pay bill provides that for basic pay purposes Navy and Marine Corps limited duty officers in the following grades will be assigned these pay grades:

Lieutenant or Captain—W-3.
Lieutenant JG or First Lieutenant—W-2.

Ensign or Second Lieutenant—W-1.
The incentive pay for hazardous duty is set at $165 for O-10, O-9 and O-8. It will be $160 for O-7 and $245 for O-6 and O-5.

The O-4 incentive pay begins at $220 and goes up $10 a month after two and four years in grade.

The O-3 rate is $185, rising to $190 after two years, $200 after four and $205 after six.

The O-2 rate is $150, going to $160 after two years.

The O-1 schedule calls for $100 and $105 after two years.

The incentive pay for W-4 is $165; W-3, $140; W-2, $135, and W-1, $130.

The incentive pay for E-9, E-8 and E-7 is $105.

For E-6 it is $90 and $95 after two years; E-5, $80 and $85; E-4, $65 and $70, and $60 for E-3.

E-2, E-1 and Aviation Cadets will get $50 incentive pay.

Congress Moves Swiftly To Give Pentagon Added Funds For "High Priority" Programs

Supplemental Defense appropriations totalling $1.26 billion in new money and $150 million in transfer authority were being rushed through the House this week to speed up and expand a number of "high priority" military programs.

The House Appropriations Committee gave the Pentagon everything the President requested and added $40 million in transfer authority for the Army.

Included in the big supplemental, which was expected to win House approval before the week-end, is authority for the President to transfer $100 million from unused funds to an "emergency fund" where it will be available for "unforeseeable and promising research and development." The President also was granted authority to take $10 million from unused funds to set up the new Advanced Research Projects Agency.

Grant Army Funds

The Army—for which nothing had been requested—received authority to transfer $40 million from unused personnel funds to its R&D and production and procurement accounts.

All of the new money, $1.26 billion, goes to the Air Force and Navy. In summary, it will finance the following broad programs:

SAC dispersal and alert program—$218.6 million.

Ballistic-missile detection system—$329 million.

Acceleration of Atlas, Thor and Jupiter—$333.4 million.

Acceleration of Polaris and ballistic missile submarines—$350 million.

Construction of additional SAGE facilities—$29 million.

A breakdown of the SAGE and SAC construction previously was published in THE JOURNAL (18 Jan., page 8).

Add Civilian Positions

To assist in securing proper scientific and technical personnel for the Advanced Research Projects Agency, the Committee authorized an additional 15 professional and scientific positions and 10 positions in grades 16, 17 and 18 for the Defense Department over and above those now authorized.

The Army's new transfer authority was approved to provide for immediate development of the Redstone follow-on solid propellant missile, and to accelerate procurement and production of the "second generation" divisional and corps-type missiles, LaCrosse, Little John and Sergeant. The new solid-propellant missile, the Pershing, as disclosed in House Armed Services Committee hearings released on 21 January, will have a greater than 200-mile range.

In addition, $133.6 million of the new money appropriated to the Air Force will go to reimburse the Army for its work on the Jupiter. The funds were appropriated for the Air Force because of the AF's jurisdiction over all intermediate range ballistic missiles.

Three Atomic Subs

Navy funds totalling $350 million were approved to speed up work on the Polaris and to construct three atomic-powered submarines designed to launch the solid-propellant missile.

Air Force funds, totalling $910 million, include $218.6 million in military construction funds for SAC's alert and dispersal facilities and air-tanker redeployment bases; $333.4 million to accelerate the potential strategic missile operational capabilities of the Atlas, Thor and Jupiter missiles, and $358 million for ground communication-electronic equipment and military construction for expenditure on ballistic missile detection facilities and the SAGE warning and control system.

The House already has approved, by a vote of 374-0, authority for the construction to be undertaken with the new funds and hearings are underway in the Senate.

preserve the Cordiner Plan's principle of "time in grade," as compared to total length of service.

The variable reenlistment allowance could cause considerably more difficulty if it is pushed.

The Cordiner Committee went into this matter in great detail during its year-long deliberation, but concluded that it would not be a satisfactory answer to the retention problem.

Advocates of the variable reenlistment bonus say that by giving men in critical skill areas substantially more to reenlist than others in so-called "soft core" areas that there will be motivation for shifts to the needed areas.

The present reenlistment bonus limit is $2000 over a career, with the largest amounts in the early reenlistments.

$2,000 Reenlistments

The variable reenlistment bonus plan could mean payments of over $2000 in one sum to men in critical skill areas.

The point that is made by military leaders is that such a reward for service yet to be performed is not the kind of motivation that is desired. They say it is something like the reward for a "bonus player" in baseball.

Military commanders advised the Cordiner Committee that extra pay in critically needed skills is essential, but they said this should be provided in recognition of continuing meritorious performance of duty.

It is pointed out that a man could receive training in his first reenlistment in a "hard skill" area, reenlist and receive the super bonus payment, and then seek other duties in another less arduous skill area.

Defense Department authorities are convinced that the proficiency pay plan is better adapted to military needs.

There is some discussion on Capitol

REWARD THE CHIEFS

Don't be surprised if some legislators advocate that the pay of the members of the Joint Chiefs of Staff be raised to $30,000 or $35,000 a year.

There is support on Capitol Hill for such compensation.

One danger would be that Congress might provide such benefits for the Chiefs, but reduce drastically the increases proposed for all other general and flag officers.

Hill of amending the Pentagon plan for active duty supplemental pay for officers in O-5 through O-8 rank.

As sent to Congress by the President, the pay bill provides that this active duty supplemental cannot be counted for retirement pay.

Reward 30-Year Men

Some Congressmen, who are concerned because of the increase in 20-year retirements, are suggesting the possibility of transferring some of the active duty pay supplemental to entry pay for officers who serve 30 years or more.

In this situation, an officer who retired after 30 years service would receive a percentage of a basic pay that would be higher than the basic pay of an officer who retired after 20 years service.

Numerous other suggested changes can be anticipated as the House Subcommittee, under Representative Paul J. Kilday (D-Tex), begins hearings on the pay measure.

There are reports from the Senate side of the Capitol that if the House group does not get into action by 15 February, the Stennis Subcommittee of the Senate Armed Services Committee may resume the one-day hearing it has held on pay legislation.

Senator John Stennis (D-Miss) and his colleagues apparently would prefer to get a consensus of House Armed Services Committee feeling on the pay matter before plunging into a detailed examination of the legislation.

Civilian Pay Helps

This is the normal procedure on military pay legislation, with the House leading the way.

Pentagon observers see in the favorable reception being given to civilian pay raise proposals bright hopes for military pay legislation.

The feeling among military people is that a pay raise will be voted this year, but no one is yet certain that the modernized system proposed by President Ralph J. Cordiner of the General Electric Company will be adopted.

Military leaders are fearful that pressure may develop for an across-the-board pay increase. Such action, they say, would not answer the problem of building the quality of the fighting forces.

Another factor that needs to be considered is the impact of the RIF action (see story Page 3) on the attitude of legislators. However, it can be hoped that the RIF situation will be cleared up long before final Congressional action on the pay measure.

Army Ends Vet Care For Private Pets

Army families can no longer have their pets cared for by Service veterinarians, according to the recently-issued Change 2 to AR 40-90.

Emergency treatment for pets is allowed by the regulation where the services of a civilian veterinarian may not be readily available.

The new policy, says the regulation, does not change Army policies on the prevention and control of rabies. Rabies inoculation may still be given to on-post pets. Off-post families can have their pets immunized if the practice is approved by the installation commander.

U. S. Soldiers On Hudson Bay Join Allies In Testing Equipment At 25° Below

U. S. ARMY FIRST ARCTIC TEST CENTER
FORT CHURCHILL,
MANITOBA, CANADA

AMINER in Peru starts an American-made generator with the flick of his finger—despite the extreme cold and high altitude of the Andes Mountains. A college boy and girl ski at Lake Placid in matching outfits of windproof nylon, which are both weightless and warm.

These products are among the many still being tested for greater perfection at Fort Churchill, Manitoba, Canada, by the U. S. Army.

Eventually, they will find their way to a ready and eager commercial market throughout the world. For testing purposes, Ft. Churchill is ideally located 500 miles south of the Arctic Circle on the west shore of Hudson Bay, in the transition zone between the Arctic and Subarctic regions.

Here extreme low temperatures often exist in combination with high wind speeds. Although the lowest temperature recorded is -57°F., temperatures at or below -25°F. occur half the days during January and February. Compared with other Arctic Stations the number of daylight hours (6 hours in December to 18 hours in June) is a decided advantage for Arctic Testing in high latitudes.

Only Deep Water Port

Fort Churchill is the only deep water port on the Hudson Bay that has both rail and air service all year round. The port itself, however, is open to ocean-going traffic only during the summer months. Despite this, few, if any, military installations in northern latitudes are better situated to execute the mission for which they were established.

Fort Churchill is operated on an international joint service basis, with the Canadian Army serving as the maintenance unit for the post. Canadian elements include representatives of the Navy, the Army, the Air Force, and the Defense Research Board; the United Kingdom Winter Warfare Study Team represents the military services of Great Britain; the United States First Arctic Test Center constitutes the U.S. Army contingent. In addition to its military functions, the station is used as a base of operations for scientists in all fields of research.

The mission of the U. S. Army First Arctic Test Center, commanded by Lt. Col. John T. Lorenz, USA, and organized under the jurisdiction of Maj. Gen. John G. Van Houten, Commanding General, Military District of Washington, is to provide logistical and administrative support for the various technical service teams working at Fort Churchill. Only such equipment as may be required for the actual testing project is brought to Churchill by the test teams, thus affording them maximum freedom to devote themselves entirely to their test programs.

Test December to March

Winter testing, which usually begins in December and ends in March, has been undertaken by the following technical services of the Army: Quartermaster, Chemical, Medical Service, Engineers, Signal, and Ordnance.

A new FATC mission of an unusual and timely nature is that of supporting the International Geophysical Year Rocketry Program at Fort Churchill. Involving some 200 select scientists and military personnel from leading American universities and governmental scientific agencies, this program is exploring the upper regions of the earth's atmosphere by means of the Nike-Cajun and Aerobee-Hi type rockets. Major IGY facilities have been constructed by U. S. Army Engineers to sustain a range area of over 1200 square miles of Arctic tundra. Logistical service support for this precision program by FATC has included everything from the storage of resistors and capacitors to the maintenance of some twelve miles of road through the roughest of Arctic terrain in the severest of winter weather.

Of particular interest are the numerous services provided the Research & Development programs by the First Arctic Test Center. A complete administrative support set-up involving finance, personnel records, legal, postal, and other functions is among them.

To accomplish this mission efficiently, a contingent of some 250 military personnel is organized for peak performance around a unique time cycle. Testing and research are conducted with one primary purpose in mind—to analyze capacity for withstanding intense cold.

Supplies Are Critical

The timely arrival of supplies and equipment is critical to the program, and the slightest delay, caused by irregularities in clearing customs and other long distance transportation problems, becomes a serious consideration. The full-scale use of maximum facilities and equipment in such intense cold for such an extended length of time causes an abnormal amount of wear, which in turn requires greatly increased maintenance and precautions. As testing facilities and billeting space are limited, careful calculations and the closest of planning must be accomplished, via FATC, between the technical service concerned and the Canadian Army.

Probably for the first time in the history of aviation, helicopters have been called upon, at Fort Churchill, to chase polar bears out of a campsite. During recent weeks, the FATC pilots have had this unique mission, which developed from the fact that food becomes scarce on the bears' trek north, and they've chosen Churchill as a logical source of supply. The pilots mount their 'copters and, in true Texas fashion, herd the animals on their journey.

FATC requires that every individual stationed here be fully acquainted with the art of surviving in the extreme climatic conditions which prevail. This is the purpose of the Cold Weather Indoctrination Course, conducted during the winter months.

Curling and Hockey

Since men of the U. S. Army have been stationed at Fort Churchill, they have become enthusiasts of Canadian sports. Curling and hockey have left their marks on the average GI, whether he be a native of Maine or Florida.

Even though Fort Churchill is located in almost total isolation, facilities found here are probably equal to those at any U. S. Army post. There is a fine theater featuring the latest movies, laundry facilities, and a commissary. An intensive Special Service Program furnishes fishing, hunting, and sports equipment, and a well-equipped, up-to-date craft shop specializes in leather-working and photography. Permanent apartment-type quarters for married personnel are provided.

Asst. Sec. Smith Tells Steps In Air Force RIF Program

The procedures under which the Air Force is making current reductions-in-force have been carefully explained to the Brooks House Armed Services Subcommittee by Assistant Secretary David S. Smith.

The Air Force manpower and personnel chief said his service was told by the Defense Department to reduce its officer strength to 136,800 by 31 December 1957 and to 133,000 by 30 June 1958. At the time of the decision there were 140,600 officers on active duty. This meant a reduction in overall officer strength by approximately 7,600 officers.

Here are the steps which Secretary Smith said the Air Force took:

Substantial reductions were made in initial procurement. In addition, officers who had indicated they did not desire an Air Force career and who were due for separation in fiscal '59 were released or scheduled for release. These actions took care of 5,200 officer spaces, leaving approximately 2,400 to be released.

Part of the latter reduction was made by involuntarily releasing and retiring those Reserve colonels with 30 years' service and Reserve lieutenant colonels and officers in lower grade who had 28 years' service.

Involved Minimal Hardship

"Since these officers are eligible for maximum or near maximum retired pay," Secretary Smith pointed out, "the hardship involved was minimal." He noted that the step was considered desirable "as a vitalizing influence and has been adopted as permanent policy." He said 226 officers were eliminated through this procedure.

Next, the Air Force convened a board to consider a group of officers "in the lower segment of the active force qualitatively." They included officers whose efficiency or conduct "had been such as to have become a matter of record in the Department" and those who had failed once of selection for permanent promotion. Approximately 414 of these officers were selected for release.

The next group to be considered involved officers who had applied for augmentation but were "not recommended" by selection boards at major command levels. The records of 463 of these officers whose score "fell in the lowest segment" were referred to a board and 395 were selected for release. All had 14 or more years of service.

The numbers thus selected for release exceeded by 215 the total number required to be released by 31 December. However, Secretary Smith pointed out, it was known that some of this group would have to be retained because they were "close to retirement eligibility or for compassionate reasons."

Considered Illness

If an officer or one of his dependents was seriously ill his release was deferred.

After selection of the officers to be released, their records again were screened and those with more than 17½ years' active service were deferred from separation until they qualify for retirement.

In addition, submission of reclaims by major commanders was authorized in any case when the commander believed that the release of a particular officer would seriously impair his command's capabilities. Those "who had undergone unusual hardship while prisoners of war," also were considered for retention.

This completed the action required to reduce the prescribed 31 December strength. However, an additional 1500 officers had to be identified for release to conform with the 30 June 1958 limitation.

2220 Could "Best Be Spared"

Major commanders were asked to identify officers who "could best be spared." The names of approximately 2200 officers were submitted to headquarters, reviewed by a selection board, and approximately 1490 were selected for release. This group also was screened to identify and defer from separation those officers with 17½ years' service, and submission of reclaims was authorized.

Secretary Smith said these are "the cold, hard facts of why the reduction was required and how it was accomplished."

He told the Subcommittee that no group of officers was exempt from RIF consideration because of age, rank, sex or length of service.

To postpone the RIF action, as suggested by the subcommittee "might very well," he said, "give an individual the false hope that perhaps the Air Force would not separate him at the later date."

Adm. Holloway Explains Navy RIF Action; Urges Retroactive Force-Out Pay Increase

The steps which the Navy took in making its current reductions-in-force have been explained to the Brooks House Armed Services Subcommittee by VAdm. James L. Holloway, Jr., Chief of Naval Personnel.

He said the RIF, directed by "higher authority," required the Navy to reduce its officer strength by "some 3,200 officers."

"We went searchingly into the manner in which the officer strength reduction was to be accomplished," he said, and "I determined that I would take the first half of the officer cut largely from among the Regular officers of the Navy, serving in temporary commission." He noted that practically all of this group had an equity in retirement, which made reversion or retirement easier.

Of the total cutback of 3200, only approximately 1200 were taken out of the senior temporary and Reserve officers. Of this 1200, approximately 600 were Regular officers serving under temporary commission in the grade of LCdr and Cdr and 600 were Reserve officers of those same grades on extended active duty.

The remaining cut of 2,000 was effected by reducing the officer procurement program.

Admiral Holloway testified that an additional 250 officers will have to be released during fiscal year 1959.

He said "it is not a pleasant thing for me, as Chief of Naval Personnel, to have to release devoted Reserve officers and temporaries who have served their country faithfully and well. But I respectfully invite your attention to the fact that I am not, under the law, able to release permanent Regular officers, and that the Reserves have no tenure."

He noted that the RIF'd officers receive "a financial settlement that, while it could be greater, is of considerable assistance in their readjustment."

He also noted that the proposed legislation to provide term-retention contracts for Reservists establishes increased lump-sum payments to RIF'd officers and suggested that the bill be made retroactive to include those affected by the current RIF.

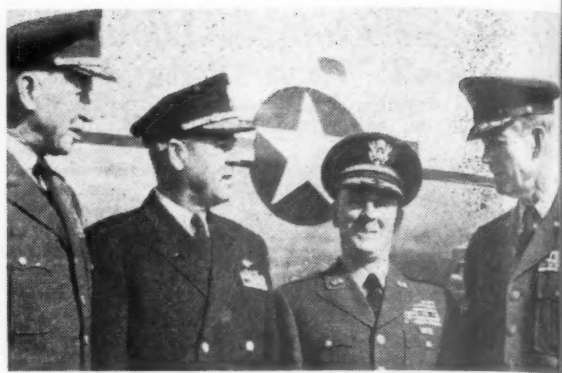

Brig. Gen. James S. Cathroe Heads AF Dental Services

Brig. Gen. James S. Cathroe will move up to the two-star post of Assistant for Dental Services in the Air Force.

He will succeed Maj. Gen. Marvin E. Kennebeck who retires 31 January.

General Cathroe has been Deputy Assistant for Dental Services since 1955. His selection for the new assignment was announced by Maj. Gen. Dan Ogle, Air Force Surgeon General.

RIF Policies Hurt Military Pay Proposal; Congressmen Criticize Reserve Release

From first page—

the Services. Secretary Smith said the reduction was the result of "pressure" to reduce the military budget.

Army Not Called

The hearings were called by Chairman Brooks after he had failed to win Pentagon support in a move to temporarily halt the RIF action, pending further study. The Army, which had already announced that it would make no further RIF's, was not asked to testify.

Secretary Francis said the Defense Department saw "no real advantage" in Chairman Brooks' suggestion to delay the RIF action for 60 days "inasmuch as it is our belief that the reduction is necessary and must be taken."

To stop now, he said, would be "unfair to those officers who have already left the Service but who may be as well or better qualified to remain on duty than some who have not yet been released."

He said the Army and Air Force will make no further reductions-in-force during fiscal '59 but the Navy will RIF an additional 250 officers. The Defense Department has determined, he said, that it will maintain a force of about 2,525,000 men through 1961.

Demoralizes Services

A packed hearing room heard members of the committee charge that Reserve officers are being "treated like step children," and that the RIF's are demoralizing the Services, "since many of the officers are being released just short of the time when they would complete necessary Service for retirement."

Secretary Francis said the Defense Department has never contemplated that more than 20 per cent of its active duty Reserve officers "will make 20-year retirement." He said the RIF action "dramatizes" this point, and the only solution is for Reservists to apply for Regular commissions. Many did not apply for such commissions under the current augmentation program, he said, and "a good many of these had their eyes wide open to the danger."

In other developments:

• Senator Strom Thurmond (D-SC) appeared before the committee to protest the Defense Department action. The former President of the Reserve Officers Association said a program should be adopted "to prevent the release of long-term Reservists."

Asks Retroactive Payments

• Admiral Holloway recommended that pending legislation to establish term retention contracts be made retroactive so as to provide higher force-out payments for officers released under the current RIF.

• Chairman Brooks suggested the possibility of lowering the current requirement that Reserve officers must serve 18 years before it becomes mandatory for the Pentagon to keep them on active duty until they achieve 20-year retirement.

• Representative Arthur Winstead (D-Miss) said "serious consideration" should be given to a plan to assess future RIF's against both Regulars and Reservists. He said if both are going to be paid on a skill basis, as urged by the Cordier proposals, they should be RIF'd in the same manner.

• Secretary of the Navy Thomas S. Gates said the Navy's RIF action was "distressing" but, in his judgment, "nothing can or should be done to recall the orders which have been issued." The Navy has "no choice but to reduce further in FY 1959," he said.

Following the open hearings, the committee recessed on 20 January. Chairman Brooks was expected to call an executive session later this week or early next week to draft a future course of action.

Army Opens Door To Med. Early Outs

Due to the reduction in the strength, a number of medical and dental officers scheduled to complete two-year Army service agreements between 1 February and 31 August 1958, may be able to return to civilian status after 21 months of active duty.

This is a voluntary program. The exact number to be affected by this ruling will not be known until reports have been received in Washington from the field.

Notification by the Department of Army of the provision for earlier release has been sent to medical installations around the globe where officers, under voluntary or involuntary agreement, are stationed.

Written requests for this earlier release must be filed by the medical or dental officer with his local commander by 10 February 1958. Applications will be approved only where release of the officer will not interfere with carrying out the mission of the Army Medical Service.

Maj. Gen. Silas B. Hays, the Surgeon General of the Army, emphasized that "this is a one-time voluntary program and is to apply only to those medical and dental officers whose actual separations could be effected by 30 June 1958."

Army Gives Approval For 34,505 Promotion

The Army has authorized 34,505 promotions to the top four enlisted grades during the first quarter of 1958, and said there would be no MOS restrictions on the appointments.

For more than a year, the Army has banned promotions to some MOS's because of surpluses.

Also announced was the authority for commanders to promote E-2's to E-3 after eight months active Federal service.

Here are the new quotas:

To E-7:	258
To E-6:	304
To E-5:	5718
To E-4:	28225
